CASTRO IS EXPELLED BY FORCE FROM MARTINIQUE

CARRIED ABOARD VESSEL

Heaping Curses on France, Deposed Ruler Sets Sail for St. Nazaire Against His Will.

FORT DE FRANCE, April 10.—Cipriano Castro, ex-president of Venezuela, was expelled tonight from the island of Martinique by the French government. He protested to the last against his expulsion, but his protests were in vain. He is now on board the French line steamship Versailles, bound for St. Nazaire.

Official notice was served on Castro this morning of the decision of the French government that he must leave the island within nine hours from the receipt of such notice and that the secretary of police at Fort de France had been charged with the execution of the order. The ex-president was furious with indignation and strove this entire day to find some [illegible] that would be satisfactory to the colonial government, whereby he would not be compelled to obey the order, and to this end, late today, he [illegible] a [illegible] physician to certify that he was unable to leave the [illegible]. The affair [illegible] and long before the police made their appearance at the hotel, crowds had gathered which later were joined by the co[illegible] representing the various foreign powers, who showed great interest in the expulsion of what one of them termed "the [illegible] enemy of peace."

Castro, who during his days at Fort De France, has had very little communication with anybody, locked himself in his room in company with his brother, Carmelo, and his secretary, and for a time refused to reply to the summons of the police officials. The police hesitated to break in the door and finally decided to submit the matter again to Governor Foureau, but the governor absolutely refused to permit any delay and he ordered Castro removed by force of arms. He also gave orders that the Versailles remain in port until Castro could be put aboard. It became necessary for the police and gendarmes to take rigid measures to hold in check the crowds that had by this time become riotous outside of the [illegible]. The ex-president railed against the

ST. LOUIS, April 10.—Arguments in the suit of the government to dissolve the Standard Oil company of New Jersey were completed in the United States circuit court of appeals here this afternoon, when Frank B. Kellogg, special assistant to the attorney general, finished his summing up of the government's case. Because of the size of the record and the magnitude of the interests involved, a decision is not expected until next autumn.

The four judges sitting en banc, after the hearing retired and held a consultation concerning their future work of going through the evidence and briefs of counsel. None of the judges would discuss the case. Before finally adjourning, the judges signed an order granting Judge Franklin B. Ferriss of St. Louis, the special examiner of the case, $20,000 and expenses for his services.

RATES OF THE SENATE TARIFF BILL ARE COMPLETED

Aldrich Announces That Bona Fide Revision Downward Will Be Recommended.

RESERVATIONS PROVIDED

Action on Hides, Steel Rails, Wood Pulp and Crude Petroleum Is Deferred.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The Senate tariff bill, so far as rates are concerned, was completed tonight, but it was decided that in making a report Chairman Aldrich will announce a reservation of certain important schedules for future action. These reservations will include hides, steel rails, wood pulp and crude petroleum.

Chairman Aldrich asserted tonight that the Senate committee had made a more general revision of rates than was done by the House committee on ways and means, and that reductions in schedules had been made on a far greater number of articles. This did not mean that there would be a reduction of revenues, but there would be recommended a bona fide revision downward of the tariff. The great number of chances which will be recommended are due largely to the fact that while the Payne bill revised rates on certain basic articles, the revision did not extend to related articles. For instance, lead ore was reduced in the Payne bill and the several manufacturers of lead ore remained unchanged. The Senate committee made general reductions on these manufactures in harmony with the reduction on the unworked material. Similar changes were made in many other schedules which will account for the many amendments that will be presented in the Senate.

SEVERAL LIVES LOST IN LENNOX, MASS., BLAZE

LENNOX, Mass., April 11.—The central portion of Lennox was swept by fire this morning. Two big business blocks and four dwellings were burned. The firemen were apparently powerless. The loss at 2 o'clock was estimated at $250,000 and help had been summoned from Pittsfield, Lee and other places.

The fire was under control at 3:15 o'clock this morning. One body, that of Edward C. Ventres, an electrician, was recovered from the ruins. Four other persons, including the wife and daughter of Ventres, are missing.

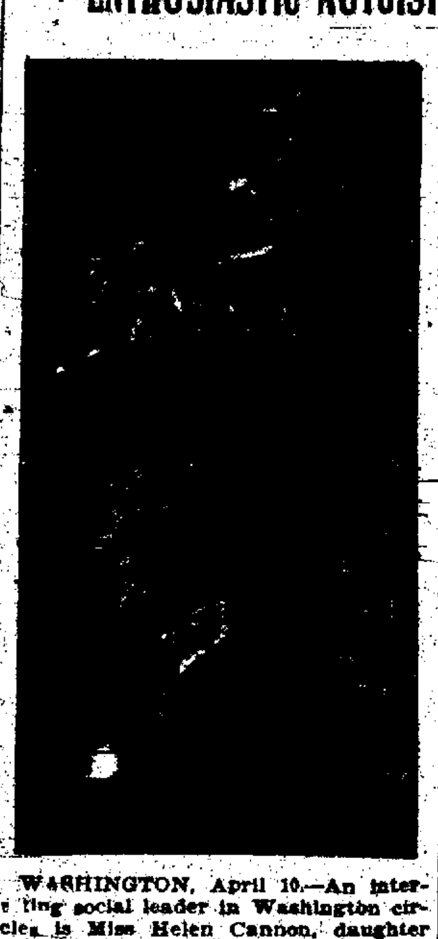

The loss was estimated at between $200,000 and $400,000.

The principal business buildings in the town were destroyed.

PRISONER ESCAPES IN AUTO

TACOMA, Wash., April 10.—After duping Fred Seigel, a Seattle chauffeur, getting him to leave him in the car alone and deliver a sealed envelope containing blank paper, a prisoner released from the King county jail under $500 bonds for attempted murder, stole the machine and drove to Tacoma, where he disappeared. Seigert followed in another machine, both cars breaking all speed records between the two cities. The released prisoner is believed to be on his way to Oregon, as he was under police surveillance, and could not leave Seattle by train.

COMMISSIONERS HAVE SAVED THOUSANDS IN DES MOINES

BETTER CITY LESS COST

After Fair Trial, Not One Citizen in 1,000 Would Vote for Return to Old Plan.

By J. T. [illegible]

DES MOINES, Ia., April 10.—Imagine five men converting a business in which 90,000 people are equally interested from a venture that has been losing thousands of dollars every year for decades to one of profit in 12 months. Imagine the substitution of strictly business methods in every department for slipshod, haphazard methods that had been constantly burying their roots deeper in the fertile soil of graft. Imagine, if you can, the elimination of everything objectionable in municipal government for all that is good, and you have a vague mind picture of the accomplishments of the Des Moines plan in Iowa's capital city during its first year.

In other words, the [illegible] of government has proven in a single year all that was hoped for it—and more. BAILEY ISSUES A WARNING TO TAFT

HAD BETTER NOT BEGIN BY COERCING CONGRESS.

Texas Senator Speaks His Mind Regarding [illegible] While Discussing Census Bill.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The bill to provide for the taking of the next census was provided by the Senate today in a form which it is understood will meet the views of the President regarding appointments for census work under regulations by the civil service commission. Efforts by some senators to allow these appointments to be made upon recommendation of senators and representatives without exception received but slight support.

In a speech, Mr. Bailey said it was reported that if the bill as passed, did not provide for appointments under the civil service, the President would veto it, and added that if any such "threat" were made it would stir up severe criticism of the President.

Hoped Taft Would Distinguish Himself.

Among other things Mr. Bailey said: "I am one of the men who sincerely hope the President of the United States will distinguish himself in his great office. I hope his administration will be an unmixed blessing to all the people, but I do not hesitate to say that no man ever had a less desirable preparation for it than the present occupant of that high office. He went from the bench where the tendency is toward a certain kind of tyranny. There is scarcely a federal judge in the United States, of twenty years' service, who has not become arbitrary, irritable and sometimes tyrannical. I do not mean that this experience would corrupt him in the sense of making him venal, but it tends to corrupt him in the sense that it teaches him to oppose his will against all obstacles.

"And the power to advise Congress is the power he has."

Civil Service Law Denounced.

These remarks followed a general denunciation by Senator Bailey of the civil service law which, he declared, he had opposed for 20 years as "a humbug and a pretense."

He declared that if the President "had thus early in his administration, undertaken to coerce Congress, he would find that the experience of the last seven years was a holiday with what the next four years would be."

Mr. Bailey said he had heard that a certain member of a legislature had introduced a resolution framed in lauda-

GOVERNOR HASKELL WILL ESCAPE TRIAL

MOTION TO QUASH INDICTMENTS UPHELD.

Decision of Judge Marshall Frees Prominent Oklahomans Charged With Land Fraud.

TULSA, Okla., April 10.—Judge John A. Marshall of Utah, in the United States circuit court today, upheld the motion of attorneys representing prominent Oklahomans, including Governor Charles N. Haskell, to quash the indictments by the federal grand jury, charging them with fraud in Muskogee town lots. As a result the defendants will not have to stand trial.

The court, in its decision, which was very lengthy, quashed the indictments on the ground that they were returned by a grand jury composed of 23 men under the federal law, instead of a jury of 16 as provided for by the Arkansas law, which was held to be in force in old Indian Territory by federal enactment at the time when the alleged frauds were committed.

Sylvester Rush, special assistant attorney general, who worked up the cases for the government, stated after the opinion was handed down today that he would again present the matter to the grand jury, submitting it without delay to the body now in session.

It is stated today that all town lot fraud proceedings will undoubtedly be dropped by the government. Aside from the town lot cases, 18 persons indicted for various offenses under similar circumstances, will go free under today's ruling.

Government attorneys hold that under today's ruling not a single conviction can be secured for a crime committed before statehood, who was not indicted before statehood. The effect of this ruling is said to be the most sweeping ever given in this court district.

The defendants affected by today's decision, besides Governor Haskell, are: Clarence W. Turner, aged 55; William T. Hutchins, aged 46; F. B. Severs, 74; A. Z. English, 41, son-in-law of F. B. Severs; Jones Hill, 58.

The aggregate wealth of the seven men is said to be over $2,000,000. The indictments against them numbered 13 and they were returned at Muskogee after a lengthy grand jury investigation, conducted by Sylvester Rush of Omaha, witnesses being brought to the state from Ohio, Michigan and other eastern states. The indictments charged alleged conspiracy to defraud the federal government and the Creek Indian nation in connection with the scheduling of Muskogee town lots in 1902.

Following the returning of the indictments all of the men involved promptly gave bonds and were released.

Governor Haskell, with a party of state officials and friends, went to Muskogee from the capital at Guthrie on a special train. His trip developed into a demonstration of an unusual character, and, when the train arrived at Muskogee he was met by bands and cheering thousands. Hundreds of men, some of them the most prominent in the state, marched in a procession that escorted the governor to his hotel. At the hotel the governor responded to wild clamors for a speech and from the hotel veranda declared he had been attacked maliciously and persecuted, and that time would vindicate him. Several hundred prominent men from all parts of the state had, previous to his arrival in Muskogee, voluntarily signed his bond, and when Governor Haskell appeared in court himself to affix his own signature to that paper the incident was turned into another rousing demonstration.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okl., April 10.—"Certainly I am pleased," Governor Haskell said at Muskogee tonight, in discussing the action of Judge Marshall at Tulsa today, "but at this time I have nothing to say."

EASTERN INVESTORS TURN TO COLORADO

BIG MEN HAVE FAITH IN STATE, SAYS V. Z. REED.

Prediction Is Made That Next 10 Years Will See More Development Than Last 50.

Bankers, railway magnates and other shrewd captains of finance of New York are turning their eyes towards Colorado as a splendid field for investment, according to Verner Z. Reed of this city, who returned yesterday from a visit to the east and south.

"In New York, where I spent a month," said Mr. Reed, "I found many prominent business men who expressed the opinion that Colorado has been placed on the financial map to stay, and that the next 10 years will be more material progress in this state than the last 50. These men foresee great things for this state, are convinced that it provides many excellent opportunities for investment, and were kind enough to say so. The men I have reference to are not men who talk just to hear themselves, but are men who mean what they say, and don't have to say what they do not mean. Personally, I look to see wonderful progress made in financial things in this state within the next 10 years, and the fact that the eastern capitalists are interested in the many good projects, is going to help materially in developing Colorado."

Big Project in Wyoming.

On his return from the east Mr. Reed visited Wyoming, where he is heavily interested with other Colorado Springs men in irrigation schemes. He expressed himself as highly impressed with the acquisition of the Lake Dumet by himself and other Springs men, and said he thought it the greatest irrigation scheme in the west. Engineer A. L. Fellows of Denver, who superintended the construction of the big irrigation canals and tunnel for the government in the Uncompahgre valley, is now engaged on the surveys for Lake Dumet and the Big Horn reservoir.

Mr. Reed left last night for a visit to the western slope, where he says wonderful progress is being made in developing fruit lands. Near Loma, the new town projected by Reed and associates, 40,000 fruit trees are being planted this spring, and the townsite is being rapidly bought up and developed land to the value of $200,000 having been already sold.

HEIR TO THRONE OF HOLLAND EXPECTED

COMING WEEK WILL SEE ROYAL BIRTH IN NETHERLANDS

Scenes of Popular Enthusiasm Among People That Will Follow, if All Goes Well.

THE HAGUE, April 10.—The birth of an heir to the throne of Holland is confidently expected the coming week, and if all goes well, the outburst of popular enthusiasm will be such as has seldom been witnessed among the placid Dutch. There has been no royal birth in the Netherlands since that of Queen Wilhelmina herself, 27 years ago. Thrice before, since the marriage of "Little Wilhelmina" as the Hollanders affectionately call the queen, have the hopes of the country been raised, only to be dashed.

The constant fear of the Dutch has been that the house of Orange would die out with a childless sovereign, and that Holland would pass under the rule of a German prince, and would thereby possibly become a German vassal state. This partly accounts for the extraordinary eagerness with which the event is awaited in every town and village in the Netherlands. Demonstrations on a gigantic scale have been arranged, a salute of 101 guns will be fired upon the announcement of the birth of a prince and 51 for a princess.

The health of the queen has been excellent. Dr. Kouwer, an eminent gynecologist, in addition to the queen's regular physicians, is in constant attendance. A suite of six rooms has been prepared for the infant by the queen herself, and in those have been installed some ancient cradles of the house of Nassau of wonderful workmanship. All, however, have been discarded in favor of a homely wooden Dutch cradle, which will be used ordinarily, while on state occasions the baby will occupy a beautiful cradle which was made at The Hague school of lace work, where two score women instructors and pupils spent many months in procuring the lace for the cradle. Two rooms are literally filled with costly presents which have been sent for the royal baby from every city and hamlet in the Netherlands.

NO FUNERALS HELD DURING HOLY WEEK

Last Rites Over Body of F. Marion Crawford, Novelist, Will Be Held Monday.

SORRENTO, April 10.—The funeral of F. Marion Crawford, the American novelist who died here yesterday, will not be held until Monday. The church does not permit the celebration of the funeral mass during Holy week. The services, which will be private and very simple, will be held in the Capucin church, to which Mr. Crawford made generous contributions. Mr. Crawford, who was deeply religious, received all the comforts of religion during his last days. The body will be placed temporarily in the chapel of the little cemetery of Sant-Angello until the will has been examined and it is learned whether Mr. Crawford expressed in it any wishes regarding his last resting place.

A delegation from the municipality of Sorrento, headed by the mayor, went today to Sant-Angello to beg for the honor of having Mr. Crawford's body lie at Sorrento. Mrs. Crawford replied that although she appreciated the honor highly, if her husband's body remained in Italy, it must lie at Sant-Angello, where he worked and lived.

The mayor of Sant-Angello has issued a manifesto, inviting the people to follow the hearse of the "illustrious and honorable citizen, who immortalized the beauties of Italy and his works."

Mr. Crawford's physician said today that his patient had died of sudden cardiac paralysis, following extreme weakness resulting from pleurisy. He suffered greatly from asthma, but he seemed to find relief in oxygen. Up to the last moment Crawford wanted to put his papers in order and almost his last act was to read the manuscript of an unfinished romance, "The White Sister," to a member of his family. He leaves 40 completed works and he had gathered together material for his masterpiece, an exhaustive account of the mediaeval communes of Italy, four volu[illegible] of

U. S. ARMY FULL; HAS 77,000 MEN

FIRST TIME SINCE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

From Now on There Will Be Systematic Weeding Out of Undesirable Soldiers.

NEW YORK, April 10.—For the first time since the Spanish-American war the United States army is recruited up to its full strength. This fact was made public here today with the posting of an order signed by the adjutant general of the army, in which all recruiting is ordered temporarily discontinued except in the case of time expired men, to whom the privilege of re-enlistment is given. The impression that bringing the armed force of the nation to its full complement of 77,000 men was due to the hard times is not shared by the army officers who have given the subject thought. According to one of these, this result was brought about in a great measure through the publication last September of an article by Colonel Heistand treating of the army as a career.

The fact that the vacancies then existing have been filled with care and discrimination is attested by the records of the various recruiting offices, which show that in the period between January 1, 1909, and February 20, 1909, no fewer than 16,984 applications for re-enlistment were rejected. From now on there is to be a systematic weeding out of undesirable soldiers to make room for promising youths of good character, whose names and addresses are being kept in a sort of deferred waiting list. By this means army men hope soon to raise the standard of the regular army until it will constitute a corps d'elite superior in morals and efficiency to any of the military organizations of the old world.

BUTTON MAKERS OF MERU, FRANCE, OUT ON STRIKE

Cavalry Ordered Out to Preserve Peace and Prevent Destruction of Property.

MERU, France, April 10.—The strike of the button makers of Meru has entered upon a critical phase. All the departmental authorities are hurrying here, and reinforcements of cavalry and gendarmes are coming by every train. Many arrests have been made. Negotiations have been futile, and disorders broke out last night in scenes recalling the revolution. Agitators came down from Paris and harangued the mob, after which the strikers stormed and wrecked four button factories and practically destroyed the residences of their employers.

The trouble arises from a reduction of 30 per cent in wages made by the employers organization, owing to the competition of Japan. The employers say they will close their establishments rather than go back to the old rate.

$500 REWARD OFFERED

Wool Growers Association Desires Arrest of Person Placing Organization in False Position.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., April 10.—The National Wool Growers association has offered a reward of $500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons whom, it is claimed, placed the association in a false position as favoring the reduction of the tariff on wool. It is claimed that unknown parties issued a circular from Kinzie Station, Chicago, entitled:

The circular also bore the statement: "For additional copies address George S. Walker, secretary National Wool Growers association."

Secretary Walker denied all knowledge of the circular and declares that the wool growers have made a strong fight to uphold the tariff on wool. He characterizes the statements made therein as libelous and a misrepresentation of facts.

WOMAN FIGHTS TO DIE

Becomes Suddenly Insane While Ill in New York Hospital, and Tries to Jump From Window.

NEW YORK, April 10.—A thrilling struggle to save a mad woman from suicide occurred tonight on the ledge of the fifth story window of the hospital for women. The woman, Mrs. Nora Hickey, 28 years of age, was finally saved from jumping to the street by the pluck of a doctor and a nurse and the help of the fire department. Mrs. Hickey became suddenly insane last night and thrust her feet through the heavy plate glass window panes in her ward.

Through the jagged holes she put her body, cutting herself frightfully, and crept to the edge of the sill, 60 feet above the sidewalk. She was about to jump when Dr. Cranston Conklin and Nurse McDonald caught her by the arm. The woman was dangling in the air, resisting rescue with insane fury.

The doctor and nurses could do nothing but hold the woman. A fire alarm was turned in and ladders were run up and the woman carried to safety by the firemen.

COMMISSIONERS SAVED THOUSANDS IN DES MOINES

of the various departments living below their appropriations. Approximately $8,000 was saved in this way, while there was paid to [illegible] the county $[illegible], [illegible] estimated.

Use Their Own Salaries.

Many of the notable achievements of the commissioners' [illegible] results of the efficiency [illegible] In addition [illegible] said that such savings would more than pay the $15,000 in council's salaries. The item of interest alone amounts to more than $5,000. Under the old administrative system nothing was received while the city now draws 4 per cent on time deposits and 2 per cent on daily balances.

The new system has made it possible to ascertain the standing of the city at any time, which was practically impossible under the old system, where each department was separately handled with no common center. All cash is now paid into the treasury and warrants drawn by the auditor for every expenditure. Uniform receipts are used in all branches. Every department is audited and semi-monthly, monthly and yearly reports are issued.

Cleaner Streets.

The streets are marked by a wonderful improvement in the street cleaning service. For years Des Moines was known for her dirty, untidy streets. But with only $35,000 in the fund they have been kept in excellent condition and the alleys have been cleaned, something never heretofore done.

Opportunities for petty graft, afforded under the old system, have been eliminated. Enforcement of contract specifications is largely responsible for this. It has been very rigid. Instead of allowing contracts for one class of material and permitting the substitution of an inferior grade at a saving, the council has refused to accept work not complying in every detail to the requirements. Attempts were made to follow the old course by some contractors and in not a few instances they were required to do the work three times before it was finally accepted.

Public Service Utilities.

Perhaps the most successful accomplishment has been the dealings of the new administration with public service utilities. Without litigation the council lowered the electric rates for street light in July from $90 to $75 a year and a few months ago from $75 to $65 under an all-night schedule instead of a moonlight schedule.

The council lowered the water rates from 30 to 20 cents per 1,000 gallons, but an injunction, secured by the water company, has restrained the city from putting them into effect until decided in court.

Gas rates, which were arbitrarily raised by a former council from $17 to $22 a lamp, have been dropped back to the old rate. Steps have been taken toward the establishment of the Chicago profit-sharing plan for the settlement of all litigation betwen the city and the street railway company. A bill, giving to cities the right to enter upon such an agreement, is now before the Iowa legislature and is receiving the combined support of the street railway interests and the city.

No "Redlight District."

Doubtless the most widely advertised accomplishment of the many reforms during the [illegible] is the wiping out of the "redlight district." Deplorable conditions and the discovery of white slave traffic, which resulted from a crusade by Councilman J. L. Hamery, head of the department of public safety, [illegible] directly responsible for an order notifying keepers of immoral houses that after September 15 their business must cease. All were summarily closed, and the order was the death knell, because vigilant police service and numerous raids have reduced the social evil to the minimum. The running of houses of ill fame even in the residence districts is practically impossible.

Coincident with the suppression of immoral houses, the "bond shark" business was doomed, and soon after the abolishment of "the district" this evil had to go. It was, in fact, this business that led to the suppression of the district, all the men being the women in bondage grew so bold that it was no uncommon thing to have them in the police court as a method of extortion. They would have them arraigned to force payment of commissions. Now bondsmen are not allowed in the police court, and they conduct only a legitimate business. Another accomplishment of the public safety department is the abolishment of all slot machines.

After haggling for 23 years for a viaduct on West Seventh street over the railway tracks, and numerous unsuccessful attempts through the state railroad commission, the present council has secured the $200,000 improvement through an amicable agreement.

No Political Hangers-on.

Now the city hall, that formerly was a loafing place for politicians and municipal leeches, presents more the appearance of a big and unusually progressive business institution. There are no politicians there, and it is free from political influence. The nonpartisan nomination and nonpartisan election put the old political machine in the junk heap, and there have been no political debts paid with public jobs. Only competent men have the places and the numerous discharges that have been made indicate that incompetents are released without delay.

Yet these are only a few of the accomplishments of the Des Moines plan. Many apparently small accomplishments that in the aggregate amount to a good deal are unnoticed. It is a generally recognized fact, however, that the city has been more economically managed in every way, better results have been accomplished and the political machinery has run more smoothly. Besides this, last year was the first time in 17 years and the second time in the history of the city that it had been run within its income. It is doubtful if one man would vote against the Des Moines plan now. Its supporters have had their fondest hopes gratified and most of its opponents have been converted.

BAILEY ISSUES A WARNING TO TAFT

tory language in relation to the former President and that in it he had this resolution taken to Mr. Roosevelt with a request that he be given a place and that he was appointed without examination to a position paying $7 a day.

"If any senator doubts that story," said Mr. Bailey, "let him ask Senator Scott of West Virginia, whether it is true."

[illegible] Senator Lodge in reply said the civil service was incomparably superior to the spoils system.

Mr. Lodge said no attempt had been made by Congress to pass the census bill over President Roosevelt's veto for the reason that it could not be done. He declared it was evident that everywhere, except in Congress, it was recognized that the classified service was an improvement over what went before.

Mr. Lodge said he did not assume to speak for President Taft, but that any member of Congress could judge for himself what the President would be likely to do in the event the bill was passed with the spoils system included.

"It is well to remember," he said, "that we are sending this bill to a President whose views on the subject of the classified service have been expressed in executive decisions on numerous occasions. It is my belief that he favors the classified service."

WOMEN BARRED FROM SALOONS

SPOKANE, Wash., April 9.—After June 1 no women can enter any saloon in this state. The new criminal code makes it a misdemeanor for the owner or employe of "any drinking saloon or music hall where intoxicating liquors are sold," to "knowingly permit to enter such saloon or sell or give any intoxicating liquor to any female person." The same rule applies to any common drunkard or any person in an intoxicated condition, or any felon.

LIQUOR TROUBLE IN KANSAS.

TOPEKA, April 10.—The state supreme court today rendered a judgment of ouster against Mayor J. P. Harsha of Hutchinson, against all of the city officials and against the city itself.

The charge against the mayor and other officials was that they permitted violations of the prohibitory law and that joints and disorderly houses were given police protection upon payment of a monthly fine.

ROOSEVELT IN GOOD HEALTH.

SUEZ, April 10.—The steamer Admiral with ex-President Roosevelt aboard, passed out of the canal about 10 o'clock tonight. The Admiral left the Mediterranean end of the canal about 4 o'clock in the morning and therefore occupied 16 hours in making the trip.

Colonel Roosevelt was in the best of health and spirits and was much interested in the canal. He regretted that he had been unable to make the whole transit in daylight.

HOULTON, Me., April 10.—An indictment against a former Methodist minister, charging incendiarism, was returned by the grand jury here today. The man indicted is T. W. Hunter, who up to a year ago was in charge of the Monticello Methodist church. It is alleged that he set fire to a house and barn at Iceland Falls last September.

NEW YORK, April 10.—General Carlos M. Harris, the Colombian consul general at New York, has received cable advices from Bogota, denying the reports of a revolutionary outbreak, headed by General Iguaran, against the admission of President Reyes of Colombia in the vicinity of Rio Hacha, a seaport on the Caribbean.

PRESIDENT'S SALARY IS STILL TOO SMALL

TAFT CAN'T LIVE AND TRAVEL ON $75,000 A YEAR.

Congress Is Being Flooded With Demands That Traveling Expenses Be Provided.

(By Sheldon S. Cline.)
Special to The Gazette.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—It is not to be doubted, of course, that the American people want their government administered economically, but there are evidences of disapproval at the parsimony of Congress in certain directions. For instance, protests are pouring in against the cutting off of the $25,000 a year formerly allowed the President for traveling expenses. When at the last session of Congress the presidential salary was increased from $50,000 to $75,000, the traveling expense item of $25,000 was cut out.

The argument in favor of increasing the salary of the President was that not only had the cost of living increased since 1873, when the salary of $50,000 a year was fixed, but that the social demands upon the President called for a much heavier expenditure. It is true that President Roosevelt did not in any year use all the $25,000 appropriated for traveling expenses, but it is popularly supposed that he used much more than his official salary in maintaining the White House. Mr. Roosevelt could afford to do this because he had a moderately large private fortune and derived a considerable income from his books. But Mr. Taft has no private fortune, and unless there is to be continuous cheeseparing at the White House a good part of the additional $25,000 salary will have to go toward paying living and entertaining expenses. Whatever traveling the President does, and it costs money for the President to travel—will have to be paid for out of whatever is left of his salary, so that unless Mr. Taft sticks pretty close to home he is going to have a hard time making ends meet, with practically no chance to lay aside anything against the day of retirement.

People Shouldn't Want It.

Now, the people don't want the President to stay at home. They want him to travel, because they want to see him. Their wish exactly coincides with that of the President, but it would be rather too much to expect that Mr. Taft should be willing that the young Tafts go without shoes and school books in order to gratify this mutual desire.

At least the people seem to see it in this light, and members of Congress are being flooded with communications from their constituents demanding that the $25,000 for traveling expenses be restored. This is likely to be done at the regular session next winter. Action would be probable at the extra session were it not for the fact that the House appropriations committee has not been appointed. Even this may not stand in the way, for a precedent was established when the census bill was brought into the House and passed without the census committee having been named.

Whether it would be possible to pass through the House a bill granting the President $25,000 for traveling expenses only a test would tell. It will be recalled that there was strong opposition to increasing the President's salary and the House only consented to this on condition that the lump sum for traveling expenses be dropped.

Unfair Argument.

Some of the unfairest arguments ever heard in Congress were used in opposition to increasing the presidential salary. A table was produced showing that appropriations on account of the President already were in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dollars. In this table were included the cost of the upkeep of the White House and grounds, the salaries of clerks employed in the executive offices, and even of the policemen detailed for duty at the White House. It was pointed out by those supporting the salary increase that the cost of running the Capitol might as well be divided by 483 and the result charged up as an addition to the salary of each senator and representative.

One of the most difficult things those statemen who opposed increased compensation for the President have to explain is why they did not vote to cut off their own mileage when their salaries were increased from $5,000 to $7,500 a year. The rate of increase for the President and for members of Congress was the same, and both were justified on the score of increased cost of living. Under the act of March 4, 1907, allowing the President $25,000 a year for traveling expenses the President was to be reimbursed only for the sums actually expended by him in travel. Senators and representatives draw 20 cents a mile each way from their homes in Washington, though the cost for travel is nothing like that amount.

Even if Congress doesn't restore the allowance, President Taft will do considerable traveling this summer, though it is doubtful if he will undertake a journey to the Pacific coast. When the President travels he must take along with him a retinue of clerks and attendants and the expenses are enormous. Though Mr. Taft is fond of travel and has traveled more than any other man who ever occupied the White House, he doesn't feel that he can afford to indulge largely in this luxury and foot the bills out of his own pocket.

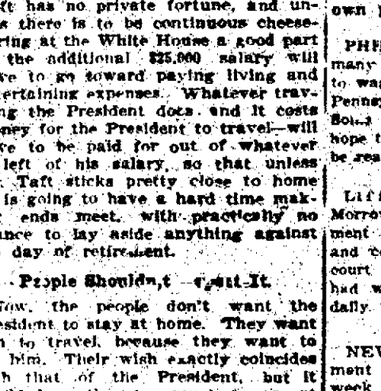

PHILADELPHIA, April 10.—Despite many conferences, conditions with regard to wages in the anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania remain unchanged tonight. Some of the mine workers entertain the hope that an amicable agreement will yet be reached.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 10.—A. M. Morrow and R. L. Leonard, two government contractors, were today fined $50 and costs in the United States district court here on the admission that they had worked employes over eight hours daily.

NEW YORK, April 10.—The statement of clearing house banks for the week (five days) shows that the bank holds $10,038,025 more than the requirements of the 25 per cent reserve rule. This is a decrease of $3,947,800 in the proportionate cash reserves, as compared with last week.

THE SPIRIT OF EASTER

French government and the local authorities, denouncing them for forcing upon him the alternative of deportation or imprisonment for six months. He declared that he would not budge and that it would be necessary to take him on board the steamer on a stretcher. This the commissary of police, who finally entered Castro's room, with an escort of gendarmes, prepared to do, but Castro's lawyer took steps to find the chief justice, and at the very last moment the governor and public prosecutor decided to have another medical examination made. Accordingly, a medical commission composed of Doctors Bouvier, Castel and Barbe proceeded with the examination in order to establish definitely if Castro's health was such that he could not make the voyage. The consultation of the physicians continued for more than half an hour and they agreed that the life of the ex-president would not be jeopardized by his removal to the steamer and the return voyage across the ocean.

Carried to Steamer on Stretcher.

At 8:30 o'clock a force of gendarmes went to Castro's room and he was placed on a mattress, he refusing to put on his clothes and was carried on a stretcher to the steamer, a distance of a mile. A thousand or more of the population had assembled by this time and a great deal of sympathy was expressed for the former president. The latter complained of great suffering and every movement of the stretcher seemed to give him further pain. He has prepared a protest, which will be sent to the French government tomorrow.

The Versailles left here at 10 o'clock and measures have been taken to keep a careful watch on Castro during the voyage.

The colonial government intends to put down any sympathetic demonstration that may be made on shore. The United States cruiser North Carolina arrived here at 4 o'clock this afternoon and is still in the roadstead.

RATES OF SENATE TARIFF BILL ARE COMPLETED

list as provided by the Payne bill, but the question of fixing a rate in accordance with the sentiment of the Senate, as expressed through a canvass taken by western senators, will be taken up in the near future.

A similar condition will be reported on steel rails. The Payne rates are $3.92 per ton, which is one-half the existing rate. The committee was impressed with the arguments made by the steel manufacturers that this rate should be increased, but it is known that considerable opposition to such action was manifested in the Senate. This item will be discussed later by the committee, and the indications are that it will be recommended for an increase to about $4.25 per ton.

No decision has been reached on the subject of wood pulp, and this fact will be announced by Senator Aldrich when he reports the bill. The same is true of crude petroleum. The duties on lumber also promise to occasion debate in the Senate, and while no change from the Payne bill will be recommended, it is predicted that a number of amendments will be offered on the floor of the Senate.

Reduction on Bituminous Coal.

The Senate committee today decided to recommend a reduction of 67 cents to 40 cents per ton on bituminous coal. The Payne bill includes slack or culm coal at the same rate as was fixed for bituminous coal, increasing the duty on this product from 15 cents to 67 cents. The Senate committee has decided to restore the Dingley rate of 15 cents per ton.

Protests made by heavy importers of gloves and hosiery against the increase made by the Payne bill over the existing Dingley rates, which protests were added to by the position taken by hundreds of women throughout the country, induced the Senate committee to agree to recommend the continuance of the Dingley rates.

Present indications are that the committee will report the bill to the Senate on Tuesday next.

The administrative feature of the bill, in all probability, will not be reported for another week or more.

Tariff Bureau.

Something of the proposed tariff bureau, which has been the object of a great deal of study, was learned tonight, although plans for the establishment of such a bureau will not be completed until other administrative features of the bill are ready to be reached. According to the present plans, the bureau will consist of a consolidation of the bureau of manufacturers and the bureau of statistics, with the under department of commerce and labor, the bureau of trade relations, under the state department, and the customs division of the treasury department. It is intended that this consolidation shall be placed under the head of the treasury department, and that it shall act in an advisory capacity to the President in the event of the adoption of Senator Aldrich's maximum and minimum provision for the application of the tariff law.

As this provision gives considerable discretion to the President, the Senate committee deems it wise to maintain a bureau which would at all times be competent to act in an advisory capacity with him in the matter of carrying out the operation of the tariff law.

PRESIDENT TAFT DECIDES ON SUMMER RESIDENCE

GLOUCESTER, Mass., April 10.—It was stated here today that President Taft and his family had definitely decided to occupy the Edward Robinson house on School street, Manchester, part of the coming summer, their arrival depending upon the length of the present session of Congress. The house is situated on a hill overlooking the golf links of the Essex Country club and is about two miles back from the shore.

Siam has recently passed a law giving women the right to vote in certain cases. While this may seem an extraordinary step for an oriental people the Siamese women themselves explain that it is the teaching of Buddhism.

Our Denver record the up-building and maintenance of the largest style store west of Chicago lends emphasis to our promise to provide the Springs with such a source of apparel, style and values as it has not heretofore had. It is not as if we came here untried and inexperienced. The only guarantee of future performance is past achievement. What we have done in Denver we are going to do here.

BALL AT ANTLERS HOTEL

Sunshine Auxiliary No. 40 Will Give Dance Tomorrow Night—Elaborate Decorations.

Elaborate preparations have been made for the fourth annual ball of Sunshine auxiliary No. 40 to Colorado Springs Typographical union No. 82, to be held at the Antlers hotel tomorrow evening. Guests will be present from Pueblo and Denver. The guests from Denver will arrive here in a special car over the Denver and Rio Grande tomorrow evening at 6 o'clock.

The decorations in the ball room will be palms, potted plants, carnations and other cut flowers. After the ball there will be an entertainment and luncheon. The committee in charge of arrangements comprises Mrs. J. P. Jones, Mrs. C. M. Carter, Mrs. H. T. Riley, Mrs. S. P. Newby, Mrs. J. J. Paugh and Mrs. B. C. Sweeney.

ART SPECIALTY STORE SECURES LARGER QUARTERS

In order to handle its increasing trade to better advantage, the Art Specialty store has moved from 17½ North Tejon to No. 8 East Pikes Peak avenue, next door to Madame Hilmer. In the new store they will have more room and will be able to keep a larger stock than heretofore.

Since opening up in Colorado Springs about a year ago, this store has made for itself an enviable position in art needlework circles and is to be congratulated upon its progressiveness.

N. C. Crawley of Colorado Springs while in Denver last week, called on the Denver Mantel and Tile company and placed an order for some nice bathroom work.

DOG FANCIERS WILL EXHIBIT THEIR PETS

SPRINGS CANINES TO MAKE SHOWING AT DENVER.

May Carry Off Some of the Valuable Prizes at Annual Bench Show.

Dog fanciers in Colorado Springs are so enthusiastic over the sixth annual bench show of the Colorado Kennel club and Intermountain Terrier club in the auditorium at Denver on April 29, and 30, and May 1, that they are arranging to exhibit their thoroughbred dogs in competition, and are confident that they will capture many of the prizes.

COCKER SPANIELS,

Allan C. Wilson will exhibit Sir Russett Rowdy, a cocker spaniel, six months old, that is backed by a long pedigree of one of the finest strains in the country. He will also exhibit Lady Satin the Second, mother of Sir Russett Rowdy, who, although never entered at a bench show, has one of the best pedigrees in the United States.

A. E. Ballard will enter his classy Boston bull terriers. Among the probable entries are a Boston bull terrier owned by Dr. R. O. Hanford, and a curly coated retriever owned by John Weimer. The retriever was imported from England and is one of the most valuable dogs in the country.

SILAS WATSON IS IMPLICATED IN THEFT

LAURA DONAL SAYS IT WAS HE WHO PLANNED ROBBERY.

Two Little Girls Are Sent to State Institutions by County Judge.

The arrest of Silas Watson and the commitment of his two daughters composed yesterday's developments in the Colorado Springs Dry Goods store robbery. Watson was arrested by Constable Harvey Gillingham of Justice O. R. Dunnington's court on a charge of receiving stolen goods, the same on which his housekeeper, Laura V. Donal, is in the county jail awaiting trial. Watson was released on bond of 1183, and will probably be tried April 14, when the Donal case comes up. Watson's arrest was on a warrant sworn out by President S. D. McCracken of the Colorado Springs Dry Goods company.

Laura Donal not only disclaims responsibility for the frequent wholesale burglaries at the dry goods store, but insists that Watson engineered the deals, and that he beat her on two or three occasions when she remonstrated with him. The woman claims that Watson calmly planned the robberies in front of his two children at meal time.

Tillie Watson, the 12-year-old girl, whose discovery in the Colorado Springs dry good store, led to the unearthing of the mysterious burglary, was sentenced to the Industrial school by Judge J. E. Little in his chambers yesterday. Her 7-year-old sister, Margaret, was committed to the State Home for Dependent Children.

SICK MAN, HEIR TO $10,000, MAY BE HERE

Search is being made in this state for Clarence E. Morley, an invalid Englishman, who has been left a fortune of $10,000 by an uncle who died recently in Gloucester, England. The last heard of Morley was five weeks ago, when he left Denver, after a stay of several months. He said he was going "somewhere to be taken care of," as he was penniless. A cousin, Henry Johnson, is now in Denver and would like to find Morley to inform him of his good fortune. There is a chance that Morley came to Colorado Springs.

UNIQUE REMEMBRANCE FOR MRS. W. ELSTUN

A unique remembrance in the form of a letter and postcard shower, bringing more than 200 missives from relatives and friends in all parts of the United States, was given Mrs. William Elstun at Emporia, Kan., on April 1, the occasion being the celebration of her seventy-fifth birthday anniversary. Mrs. Elstun is the mother of George Elstun and Robert Elstun of Colorado Springs and is well known here, having frequently visited in this city.

Mrs. Elstun received 45 letters on her seventieth birthday and answered every one of them herself. She says that she will personally answer the ones she received this year. Her husband, Judge William Elstun, died at Emporia 14 years ago.

Consumptive Tells How He Was Cured by Professor Fournier

E. H. Cooper Was In Third Stage, Expecting Death, When Saved By Saline Treatment.

E. H. COOPER,
Who Was Saved from Death by Fournier's Saline Treatment.

Believing that death was merely a matter of a few weeks and reconciling himself to his fate, E. H. Cooper of Denver was snatched from the grave at the very brink and today he is speaking in high praise of the wonderful saline treatment for tuberculosis that was discovered by Professor L. F. Fournier, the French chemist, who has startled the entire medical world and put hope in the hearts of thousands of victims of the white plague.

That Mr. Cooper is alive today is due entirely to the Fournier treatment. Physicians gave up all hope of curing him, and even the pure ozone from Colorado's mountains failed to restore him to health. Mr. Cooper has been taking Fournier's saline tablets for more than a year and he tells, for the benefit of every person afflicted with consumption, the result of this treatment as experienced by himself. Not only does he tell, in a letter, of how he was benefited, but he says he is willing to meet and talk with tuberculosis sufferers on the subject.

Mr. Cooper's letter follows:

DENVER, Colo., March 10, 1909.—The Fournier Remedies Company, 419 Majestic Building, Denver, Colo.: Gentlemen—Too much cannot be said in favor of the Fournier Saline Treatment for tuberculosis for the reason that there is no question in my mind that it is the most effective treatment for this disease that is known in the world today. In recounting the action of this treatment upon me it will be necessary to go back some eighteen months, when I was in such a bad condition from consumption that several leading physicians of Cincinnati and Plainsville, Ohio, gave up all hope of curing me, and I had reached the conclusion that death with me was simply a matter of a few weeks.

These physicians informed me that I could not live if I remained in that climate and they advised me to go to Colorado. After arriving in Denver I decided to try life in the open air, so I bought a tent and, after selecting a desirable location out in Berkeley, I pitched this tent and moved into it with my wife and family.

Although I enjoyed the benefits of the pure air from the mountains I did not improve, but, on the contrary, I continued to fail and finally became very weak.

At last, when even hope of relief from pure mountain air was abandoned, some one informed me that Professor Fournier had discovered a new treatment for tuberculosis and that he was offering to treat all victims free of charge at his home, so I decided to pay Professor Fournier a visit. I was so weak when I reached his home that I was compelled to rest for some time on a lounge before I could undergo the ordeal of an examination.

Any sufferer from tuberculosis will understand readily my condition at that time. I had had night sweats so long that I felt the grip of death upon my heart. I could breathe only with labored effort and my friends tell me that I looked like a dead man.

Professor Fournier examined me thoroughly and finally told me that he could not promise me any great measure of hope, but that possibly his Saline Treatment would relieve my suffering and prolong my life. With this understanding I began the treatment.

Within ten days I began to realize that Professor Fournier had not exaggerated when he told me that his treatment would give me relief. The Digestive Tablets he gave me toned my stomach and I was enjoying my meals and his Saline Tablets were putting new vigor into my blood. Gradually my strength returned and I could breathe much more freely. Day by day my strength increased until I could take extended walks.

I want to state right here for the benefit of all persons afflicted with consumption, who may see this letter, that I am in better health than I have been for years, and that I firmly believe that I am on the road to final recovery. Of course, I cannot hope to be the same man I was before I broke down with consumption, as I was in the third stage of the disease when I began the Fournier treatment, but I am glad of this opportunity to testify to what this treatment has done for me. Therefore, it is reasonable that the same hope can be held out to others suffering as I was suffering when I took up this treatment.

I would be glad to meet any person afflicted with tuberculosis so that the sufferer can be convinced that what I am writing is the truth.

Yours very truly,

BERNARD PRESIDENT OF JENNIE SAMPLE

James F. Burns Made Vice President, Claim Other Side Has no Legal Status

President S. S. Bernard of the Jennie Sample Consolidated Mining company was re-elected at a meeting of the directors in this city yesterday morning. James F. Burns was elected vice president and J. M. Thompson was chosen as secretary-treasurer. Bernard will continue to act as general manager of the property. All are of Colorado Springs.

The directors also appointed Judge W. S. Lacey of Cheyenne, Wyo., resident agent of the company to succeed C. W. Burdick, who was censured by resolution for his alleged prejudice in favor of the Carlton-Avery-Gay faction of the company. Lacey is Cheyenne attorney for the Union Pacific railroad. This proceeding of the directors is based on Burdick's alleged action in becoming Carlton's attorney while an agent of the company. The directors also passed resolutions censuring the Carlton-Avery-Gay faction, whose charges against the management they characterize as wholly unwarranted.

Claims of Bernard Side.

Two points are raised by the Bernard directors in support of their contention that the Carlton directors have no legal status, and that the entire proceedings of that faction after the adjournment of the first meeting in Cheyenne, April 2 are void. The first is the claim that the Carlton people secured the proxy of Father Bender of Denver, who holds more than 30,000 shares of Jennie Sample stock, on the false representation that the Carlton adherents were on Burns' side. On this representation, Father Bender revoked a proxy previously given to the Bernard-Burns side, but on learning of the affair from Howard Masterson, who is associated with Burns, he again revoked his proxy, and made it in favor of Bernard and Burns.

The Second Point.

The second point raised by Bernard is that the Carlton election in Cheyenne was held on a minority report of the credentials committee, before the credentials committee, as a whole, had reported. This committee consisting of Howard Masterson, chairman; J. M. Thompson and H. L. Shepherd, considered the various proxies and stock present at the meeting, and Masterson and Thompson, composing a majority of the committee, decided to adjourn to determine the validity of the telegraphic proxies of the Carlton people. Shepherd, who was on Carlton's side, wanted the telegraphic proxies adjudged legal and voted against adjournment. The importance of this procedure, as pointed out by the Bernard faction, lies in the fact that the stockholders' meeting could not be legally held until after the submission of the report of the credentials committee, and they claim that the Carlton meeting based on the minority report, is without standing because the credentials committee adjudged by a majority action, had not reported. Furthermore, according to Bernard's adherents, Shepherd, the minority member of the committee tacitly admitted that the committee had a right to adjourn, by his action in voting against adjournment. In other words, the Bernard contention is that if Shepherd had refused to vote, on the ground that the committee could not adjourn, then he might have questioned its right in the premises.

Further complications are expected when the Carlton-Avery-Gay faction make public their side of the contest.

APPLICATION DISMISSED

C. P. Campbell and C. D. Hopkins Tried in Court Brought Against L. K. Jones.

The application for the writ of mandamus filed in the district court of Denver by C. P. Campbell of Los Angeles and C. D. Hopkins of this city, to compel Lloyd Kenyon Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Deacon Consolidated Mines company, to allow an auditing of the books, has been dismissed by Judge Greeley W. Whitford.

The writ of mandamus was brought against Jones because of the fact that he was charged with having refused to permit Hopkins to take a list of the stockholders of the company. Jones states that Hopkins, in company with his attorney, Henry Trowbridge, made a demand for the list, but Jones mistrusted the purpose, as the company has been suing Campbell and Hopkins for the recovery of certain stocks, notes and money. When the case was called this week Lyndon S. Smith, attorney for the Deacon company, put in a demurrer, which was sustained, and this necessitated the filing of another charge, which the plaintiffs did not do.

"I never want to hear the name of Roosevelt again," declared the dignified statesman.

CHARGES NONSUPPORT

Mrs. Josephine Atkins Takes Complaint Against Husband Following Close of Murder Case

Turning the tables on her husband, who recently accused her and her 16-year-old daughter, Theodora Voss, with trying to murder him, Mrs. Josephine Atkins yesterday afternoon swore out a warrant in Justice O. R. Dunnington's court, charging Y. L. Atkins with nonsupport. Atkins will have a hearing this week.

After the acquittal of the Voss girl on a charge of assault to murder the case against her mother was nolled by Assistant District Attorney M. W. Purcell.

RATTLER PROPERTY IS IN DANGER OF BEING LOST

Secretary S. L. Caldwell has issued a circular-letter to stockholders of the Rattler Gold Mining company, again calling their attention to the announcement of last October of the condition of the company's affairs and the necessity of action to redeem the property from sheriff sale. He states that some of the stockholders have responded to the call for voluntary contributions, but that there are many yet to be heard from. He emphasizes a statement that in the event that all of the stockholders do not pay their pro rata share it will be necessary to let the sheriff's deed issue.

The period for redemption by the company from sheriff sale has expired, but the holder of the judgment lien is desirous of giving the stockholders an opportunity of protecting their interests before he makes application for a deed. This action will not be taken prior to May 1.

TWO SUSPECTS IN MANITOU JAILED FOR VAGRANCY

M. J. Mitchell and Willis Coffer, two suspicious looking characters, were arrested in Manitou yesterday and sentenced in a justice court to 15 days each in the county jail for vagrancy. The men are thought to be wanted by the Kansas authorities, and are said to be ex-convicts.

GOTTLIEB BADER VS. COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

The case of Gottlieb Bader vs the county commissioners of El Paso county, to recover $1,500 damages for right of way on the county road south of this city was on trial before Judge W. S. Morris of the district court yesterday, and will be continued tomorrow.

DOCTORS MISTAKES

Are said often to be buried six feet under ground. But many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous prostration, another with pain here and there, and in this way they present alike to themselves and their easy-going or over-busy doctor, separate diseases, for which he, assuming them to be such, prescribes his pills and potions. In reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some uterine disease. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, keeps up his treatment until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, by reason of the wrong treatment, but probably worse. A proper medicine like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery. It has been well said, that "a disease known is half cured."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully devised by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate system. It is made of native American medicinal roots and is perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the female system.

As a powerful invigorating tonic "Favorite Prescription" imparts strength to the whole system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," house-keepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, St. Vitus's dance, and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the uterus. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. One to three a dose. Easy to take as candy.

A. P. MARTIN EXPLAINS

Says He Was in Close Touch With Head Consul A. R. Talbot in Plans for Woodmen Meeting

In regard to the donation of $150 given Monday night by the city council to the local camp of Modern Woodmen for the entertainment of national lecturers [illegible] who will be here, Mr. A. P. Martin, who made the request for the money, stated yesterday that he had been in communication with Head Consul A. R. Talbot for some time in regard to the school of instruction and arrangements for handling it.

On March [illegible] Mr. Martin received a letter from Mr. Talbot notifying him of the approaching visit of the lecturers and asking him to make arrangements for hotel accommodations. Several letters passed back and forth before it was definitely decided to accept the offer of George S. Elstun of the Alamo hotel. In the meantime the matter of holding a public meeting at the Opera House was suggested by Mr. Martin and the date of May 25 was partially decided upon. In a letter dated March 24, Mr. Talbot suggested to Mr. Martin to invite the other camp to join in with you." He went on to say: "Perhaps it could be handled better by having a committee appointed by your camp to confer with the other camp, or a like committee appointed by that camp so that the two camps will work together on a public meeting, although your camp would really have charge of the meeting along the lines suggested in your letter."

VINDICATOR COMPANY PASSES DIVIDEND

General Manager F. J. Campbell of the Vindicator Consolidated Gold Mining company has issued a circular announcing that the quarterly dividend due April 25 will not be paid owing to a decrease in the value of ore in the upper levels, and the payment of $11,700 in taxes. He says that during January and February, the ore was of the lowest average grade in the history of the company, but that it has more than doubled in value during the last month. He closes with the prediction that the old dividend will be resumed July 25.

The last dividend, the forty-third paid by the company, was at the regular rate of 3 cents per share, and was disbursed January 25. It amounted to $45,000, and brought the total dividends of the company to $1,955,000. The directors of the company are particularly disappointed at passing the expected dividend this quarter, because another disbursement of $45,000 would have brought the grand total beyond the $2,000,000 mark.

C. C. CONSOLIDATED CO. MAKES ANNUAL REPORT

The report of the Cripple Creek Consolidated Mining company for the years 1906 and 1907 show ore royalties of $1,579.56, which, together with the cash balance of $9,150.40, on hand January 1, 1907, and minor revenues, brings the total receipts for the two years to $11,434.46. Of this amount $2,088.35 was spent for taxes. General and other small expenses brought the total expenditures to little more than $3,000, leaving a cash balance of $8,246.83 on hand January 1, 1909.

Much prospecting has been done during the last two years, but with little results. The royalties above noted are from ore sales, totaling $13,322.40. The company has no debts, save unclaimed dividends amounting to $796. J. F. Humphrey of this city is president of the organization.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Babcock of Neenah, Wis., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Read, 116 St. Vrain court.

MAKING GOOD

There is no way of making lasting friends like "Making Good"; and Dr. Pierce's medicines well exemplify this, and their friends, after more than two decades of popularity are numbered by the hundreds of thousands. They have "made good" and they have not made drunkards. A good, honest square-deal medicine of known composition is

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It still enjoys an immense sale, while most of the preparations that have come into prominence in the earlier period of its popularity have "gone by the board" and are never more heard of. There must be some reason for this long-time popularity and that is to be found in its superior merits. When once given a fair trial for weak stomach, or for liver and blood affections, its superior curative qualities are soon manifest; hence it has survived and grown in popular favor, while scores of less meritorious articles have suddenly flashed into favor for a brief period and then been as soon forgotten.

For a torpid liver with its attendant indigestion, dyspepsia, headache, perhaps dizziness, foul breath, nasty coated tongue, with bitter taste, loss of appetite, with distress after eating, nervousness and debility, nothing is as good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It's an honest, square-deal medicine with all its ingredients printed on bottle-wrapper no secret, no hocus-pocus humbug, therefore don't accept a substitute that the dealer may make a little bigger profit. Insist on your right to have what you call for. Don't buy

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Expecting it to prove a "cure-all." It is only advised for woman's special ailments.

It makes weak women strong, sick women well. Less advertised than some preparations sold for like purposes, its sterling curative virtues still maintain its position in the front ranks, where it stood over two decades ago.

As an invigorating tonic and strengthening nervine it is unequaled. It won't satisfy those who want "booze," for there is not a drop of alcohol in it.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, the original Little Liver Pills, although the first pill of their kind in the market, still lead, and when once tried are ever afterwards in favor. Easy to take as candy.

INTRODUCTORY SALE WEEK

Introducing the enlarged Hibbard Store and its new departments

OCCASIONS OF THIS KIND, no matter how important they may be to the merchant, are of minor interest to the buying public if they lack unusual buying opportunities. When a person enters a store it is not, as a rule, that they are upon pleasure bent, nor from idle curiosity, but rather to supply the necessities of life or to satisfy the requirements of fashion. It is almost always a matter of business, and the store that offers the best business propositions is the store that is entitled to your patronage. This is the reason why leading stores throughout the country have long ago abandoned the "opening" idea.

Beginning Tomorrow Morning at 9 o'clock, we announce a one-week's Introductory Sale, introducing the enlarged Hibbard Store with its new departments.

This auspicious occasion marks the advent of our sixteenth year in business in Colorado Springs, which we are going to celebrate right royally with a wide-spreading, far-reaching sale unequalled in scope and character by any Colorado Springs store at this season.

WHILE IT IS TRUE that special prices quoted are most convincingly in the buyer's favor, they are but one of the powerful attractions. This store is magnificently stocked with the best and choicest spring and summer merchandise of every description; the gorgeous exhibit of Ready-to-Wear Apparel for women and children; the exquisite new Silks and Dress Goods of leading and most reliable makes; the stunning ideas in prepared Millinery; the new things in Dress Trimmings, Ribbons, Neckwear, Gloves, Hosiery, Corsets and Underwear; superb new Flemish and other finest Linens; New Curtains, Draperies, Carpets, etc., all welcome you to come, inspect and compare. Again we invite you to be present.

Instead of announcing a formal opening, with its incumbent expense of music, flowers, souvenirs, etc., all of which the public is obliged to pay for in increased profits, on such occasions; we have decided to give the patrons of this store the benefit of all this and more, too, by announcing this important Introductory Sale brimming with extraordinary values throughout the store, this week.

We have waited till now—after the tumult of Easter business—to formally announce the Readiness of the New Hibbard Store, with its enlarged quarters, its new departments, its improved lighting service, its modern store system, its new stock of spring merchandise, and its matchless low prices for the best merchandise obtainable.

Special Demonstration of Thomson's Famous "Glove Fitting" Corsets, This Week, by Miss Steele, of New York

You are cordially invited to attend a special demonstration of the famous Thomson "Glove Fitting" Corsets, to be held by Miss Steele of New York, in our new Corset Department, on second floor of the Annex. Miss Steele comes to us with highest recommendations as an expert fitter, thoroughly practical to the minutest detail. This demonstration will afford you an excellent opportunity to see the [illegible] models for spring and summer, and at the same time learn just what style and model of corset will best meet your individual requirements. The manufacturers of Thomson's "Glove Fitting" Corsets are among the foremost makers in the country; their new models are made precisely in conformity with latest fashion tendencies. The New Grand Duchess Spring Models are of the very stylish "sheath" effect, and will equalize the bust, waist and hip lines, whether the figure is slender or stout.

DOCTOR-JACK POT CO. MAKES ANNUAL REPORT

The report of the treasurer of the Doctor-Jack Pot Mining company for the year 1908 shows that the total receipts of the company were $42,846.13, of which $39,540 30 was received in royalties and the remainder from the sale of machinery, stock assessments and a refund on final settlement from McAllister & Vandy, attorneys. The total disbursements were $9,720.61, leaving a net gain of $32,093 52.

A statement is given of the reorganization of the old Doctor-Jack Pot company, which took place in May, 1905. A large part of the company's territory is being operated by lessees and their developments have in many cases opened new and extensive ore bodies. Developments on the Lucky Corner claim proved conclusively, says the report, that the Little Clara vein apexed on the Doctor-Jack Pot property and a suit is now in the courts with the Work company seeking an adjustment of the claims accruing from the ore alleged to have been extracted from the apex territory. The company's engineers have estimated that the gross value of the ore taken was in excess of $1,000,000.

INSANE MAN DRAWS THE LINE AT KANSAS

Although his insanity had developed to such an extent that absolutely all reasoning power seems to have fled, Thomas Mathews, until recently a prisoner in the state penitentiary at Canon City, is willing to acknowledge that he was born in any state in the Union except Kansas according to the testimony of County Physician E. L. McKinnie in the county court yesterday. Mathews was adjudged insane and was ordered committed to Woodcroft sanitarium at Pueblo.

Dr. McKinnie testified that Mathews answered in the affirmative when asked regarding his nativity in the various states, Kansas alone excepted, and gave a decided negative when questioned as to the Sunflower state. Mathews is 38 years old, and was sentenced in the local district court to a long term in the penitentiary for a statutory crime.

FINDLEY CONSOLIDATED IN GOOD CONDITION

The annual report of the Findley Consolidated Mining company for the year 1908 shows that the total receipts for the year were $188,868 75, of which all but $155 52 came from the sale of ore and royalties. The total disbursements were $151,465 04, leaving a net gain for the year of $37,403 71. A much greater profit than this had been anticipated, but owing to the caving of the hanging wall of the largest stope in the mine, much low-grade material was mixed with the ore, and the company was compelled to hoist the entire product.

A reduction in the cost of mining was made during the year from $14 to $9 a ton by reason of the improved mining machinery installed in 1907. The company is out of debt and has a substantial cash balance in the bank.

GOVERNMENT ENTERS FRAUD ORDER AGAINST W. W. DEGGE

Postmaster General F. H. Hitchcock has entered a fraud order against W. W. Degge of Boulder and the following companies in which he is interested. Wellington association, Wellington Development company, Wellington Investment company and the Wellington system, together with their officers and agents as such, with offices in Boulder.

This action was taken as a result of alleged fraudulent use of the United States mails. A permanent injunction was also issued in the courts against Degge and his companies and agents, restraining them from using a certain subscription list stolen from the office of the Mining Investor in Denver. The judge also ordered Degge to pay all costs and damages to the Mining Investor Publishing company.

Degge and associates entered suit for damages against the publishing company several months ago, as a result of articles criticising the methods of the plaintiffs. The case is of particular local interest because the Mining Investor was formerly published in Colorado Springs, and the following officers of the company lived here for many years: President, Claude Sachs, secretary, W. S. Tarbell, and associate editor, F. C. Wilder.

END OF A RED NOSE

New Flesh-Colored Product That Heals and Hides Skin Imperfections

A peculiar feature of posiam, a new skin discovery, is that it is naturally flesh-colored and contains no grease, so that when used on the face for the complexion, or for pimples, red noses, or any other inflammation, blemishes or discolorations, its presence cannot be detected. It can thus be applied in the day time, the natural color of the skin being immediately restored, and the actual healing and curing process accomplished in a few days. It can be had of any pharmacist who sells pure drugs. The Robinson Drug Co. and the Owl Drug Co. make a specialty of it. Fifty cents' worth will answer either for the troubles mentioned or in curing ordinary cases of eczema. Itching stops at once.

Any one who will write to the Emergency Laboratories, No. 32 West Twenty-fifth Street, New York, can secure, by mail free of charge, a supply sufficient to cure a small eczema surface or clear a complexion overnight and remove pimples in twenty-four hours.

COMMISSIONERS FORM A NEW COUNTY ROAD

County Commissioners J. P. Madden, B. A. Banta and Harry Hutchinson have passed a resolution declaring 18 miles of open thoroughfare in eastern part of this county to be county road. The road takes up the former county road from this city east to Ellicott, about 24 miles distant, and continues east on the north line of township No. 14, to the county line, a distance of 18 miles. This gives a clear county road of 42 miles from Colorado Springs to the county line.

The eastern part of this road has been open for years, but was never formally declared county territory. This resolution prevents farmers from fencing parts of the thoroughfare.

Skin and Blood Diseases Banished

The Blood Quickly Purified, and the Skin Healed by Stuart's Calcium Wafers

The importance of the blood to the physical system is apparent to every one. It contains in itself all the elements necessary for the nourishment and reconstruction of the tissues of the body, these elements being absorbed from the food in the stomach.

The blood is the greatest circulating medium in existence. It is the channel of transportation in the body not only of nutritive supplies to the tissues, but also of the consumed and worthless materials that have fulfilled their purpose, and are to be passed from the body.

It frequently happens that the blood becomes charged with impurities absorbed from the stomach, intestines and kidneys, and which, if it is unable to eliminate through the usual channels, it sends out through the pores of the skin in the form of pimples, blackheads, and various skin eruptions.

The skin is composed of two layers, known as the scarf skin, or cuticle, and the true skin, or derma. The number of pores in the skin is estimated to be 2,800 to the square inch, or a total of about 7,000000 in the entire system, and if put in one continuous tube, would measure twenty-eight miles in length. About one-fifth of the impurities of the body are eliminated through these pores.

If the scarf-skin, which is constantly being thrown off, should for any reason, collect and block up the pores, skin disease, such as furuncles or boils, carbuncles, acne, lichen, etc., are certain to occur.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers is the ideal remedy for keeping the blood free from impurities, and the skin devoid of eruptions, no matter what the cause may be, as the wafers cleanse the entire system, and act generally as well as locally. The principal ingredient of this remedy is calcium sulphide, which is a standard U. S. P. preparation, and its powerfully-alterative, blood purifying and skin-healing properties are well known to all physicians and druggists.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers act mildly upon the liver, kidneys, and intestines, and powerfully upon the blood, and skin, eliminating impurities of every nature, healing all skin diseases, and building up rich, red blood and rendering the complexion rosy and healthy.

Obtain a box of this powerful remedy from your druggist, if you are suffering from such diseases as pimples, blackheads, boils, carbuncles, tetter, herpes, erythema, urticaria, roseola, nettle rash, hives, ringworm, etc., and you will be surprised at the alacrity with which the system is rid of these troubles. He will sell you a package for 50 cents, or send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

BLACKS DISMANTLE U. S. JUDGE'S HOME

Negroes Resort to Extreme Measures to Satisfy Claim Against Magistrate.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 10.—The home of United States Circuit Judge W. B. Sheppard was dismantled today to satisfy a judgment obtained by a negro, who was run down by the judge's automobile. A special meeting of the Atlanta Bar association has been called to consider means of disciplining the negro's lawyers and forcing preparation for the judge. There is great excitement here over the affair, which members of the bar association characterize as an outrage.

Judge Sheppard had agreed to pay the negro's medical bill and give him $50. The negro's attorneys rejected this proposition however, and swore out a writ of attachment. One of the attorneys accompanied by a constable and a force of negroes, went to the judge's home and found Mrs. Sheppard alone with her children, one of them a baby six months old. They seized everything in sight and carted it away—all the furniture except the beds, taking the clothing of the entire family, the trunks and even the children's toys.

All the time Mrs. Sheppard says she was pleading with the men to wait until her husband returned, but they refused and she says they were rough and insolent.

Judge Sheppard has bitterly denounced the treatment as not only outrageous but an attack upon the dignity of the United States court.

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 10.—The Florida fast mail train of the Seaboard Air line southbound, was derailed 46 miles south of Columbia early today. Five white persons and three negroes were injured, but none seriously. There is evidence that a switch had been opened, the lock being broken and the switch light taken away. None of the passengers was hurt.

CINCINNATI, April 10.—The government will endeavor to establish a precedent in regard to the enforcement of its regulations as to the branding of sugar when the case against the Corn Products Refining company of Chicago is called for trial in the United States district court here. Forty-six bags of sugar made by the concern are under seizure here. It is charged that the sugar is misbranded.

BALTIMORE, April 10.—The steamship Mars, one of the three colliers built by the Maryland Steel company for the navy department, was launched today at Sparrows Point. Mars is to cost $500,000.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 10.—One of the strongest sections of the state prohibitory law was declared unconstitutional here today by Justice Mayfield. The section knocked out prohibited the storing or possession of liquor in any building or apartment which was uninhabited. Under this ruling the hotel and cafe men whose places were raided a few days ago have brought suit to set aside the seizures.

Czar Baseball Enters Into His Own

"PLAYERS ON WHOM BATTLE WILL CENTER."

By John B. [illegible].

When the season of 1908 was completed the four best contests for pennants in the history of organized baseball were finished with it.

Three teams fought in the National league for supremacy until four days before the expiration of the schedule, and two [illegible] before the National league [illegible] was [illegible], were compelled to play an added and extra game [illegible] to the regular season.

Three teams were in the race almost to the last day of the American league championship and two until the last series. The championship in the American association was not settled until the frost was on the vine in that organization, and the Eastern league race, although a trifle more separated by teams, was a bitter gallop to the very jumping off place where baseball ceased and football began.

No student of baseball analysis in the United States, even were he saturated with optimism, essayed to predict such an outcome prior to the beginning of the baseball year, when prophesies were seasonable. The annual forecast of the Evening Telegram [illegible]rted flatly that the National league race would be by far the best for seasons, but was satisfied to rest on that. The assertion was also made that the American league race would be a duplicate of other great struggles in that organization. That the fight in both leagues would be continued until the expiring moments of the season was admitted to be possible, but was not predicted.

To state now that the contests for the championship of the four leagues in question will be as close this year as they were in 1908 would be rather rash. They may be. There is always that possibility in baseball, but they do not appear likely to be.

Strength May Be Waning.

Three of four of the clubs which were in the thick of the fight in 1908 show indications of a falling off in strength to the eyes of those who make baseball from a study. Last year they were at their zenith. Their stars are now in their declination instead of their ascendency.

After all, the great battle of each season is that which takes place between the pitchers on the one side and the batters on the other.

The closer these contending forces are matched, the better the race will be for the championship and the tighter the odds.

In the two major league races for 1908 baseball "fans" may not have noted that the pitchers of both the National and American leagues were almost exactly divided in regard to their ability in the box. Almost half of the pitchers in the National won 500 per cent or more of their games. Almost half of the pitchers in the American league did exactly the same thing.

Will the pitchers be divided so evenly in 1909? If one could but answer that question it would afford gratification to many an owner who enters upon the year full of hope and faith, but with a negative touch to the brightest picture which is painted in his imagination, as only too well he knows the possibilities of accident and the penalty of accumulating years upon his men.

If the championship races of 1909 are not so close as those of 1908, and another such nerve racking strain should almost separate families there is at least plenty of reason to believe that they will be much superior to some of the contests for the pennant which have taken place in the past. For while there may be teams which may not quite meet expectations, it is wise to take into consideration that any slump on their part may not take them so far down the ladder as has been customary in other years, owing to the fact that very good auxiliary strength has been recruited from the clubs of the minor leagues.

GOULD RETAINS HONORS

Defeats Crane and Wins American Championship [illegible] Difficult Service [illegible]

BOSTON, Mass., April 10.—Jay Gould, the international and national amateur court tennis champion, successfully defended his title of American champion in a hard-fought contest with Joshua Crane of this city, on the courts of the Tennis and Racquet club today.

Mr. Crane forced the first set to vantage and took the second very handily, but after that Mr. Gould settled down to steady play and won the next two sets. The scores were: 6-5, 3-6, [illegible], 6-3. In the first set, Mr. Gould won out with his difficult service. Mr. Crane has won the championship several years. Until the entry of Mr. Gould in the sport he was one of the best amateurs in this country.

LOWELL NINE TAKES FOUNTAIN INTO CAMP

Playing a snappy, consistent game, the Lowell lads yesterday afternoon took the Fountain High school nine into camp at Boulevard park for the second time this season. The nine innings ended with Lowell victorious by a score of 14 to 11. The eighth inning opened with the score 11 to 10 in favor of the visitors, but the locals steamed up and tied the score. In the ninth, the Lowells tallied thrice.

Following are the players: Fountain—Rhinehart, Hall, Gu[illegible], Goddard, Townsend, Willis[illegible], Rider, Rurtz, F. Goddard. Lowell—Fitzpatrick, Borden, Jacobs, Wilken, Kittleman, Long, Stearns, Holmes, Grain, Darr.

The score by innings:

HARNESS HORSES ARE ENTERED FOR BIG STAKES

DETROIT, Mich., April 10.—With the entries from California still to come in the mail due here next Monday the largest number of horses in the history of the event has been named for the Merchants and Manufacturers $10,000 stake for 2:24 class trotters, the feature event in the harness meeting here July 26 to 30, which opens the grand trotting circuit. Twenty-three entries have already been received. The Chamber of Commerce stake for 2:12 pacers has 14 entries, the [illegible] 15, and the 2:11 trotting event, [illegible], 17.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 10.—Henry St. Yves, the winner of the $10,000 Marathon derby in New York last Saturday, today defeated Matt Maloney of Yonkers, N. Y., in a 20-mile race at the Eastern League Baseball park by 2 laps and 35 yards. Time, 2 hours, 2 minutes, 2 seconds.

Fifteen Thousand People See Contest [illegible] Pennsylvanians in Preliminary.

PHILADELPHIA, April 10. In the first boat race between the two universities in 20 years, the University of Pennsylvania eight-oared crew defeated Yale today by two lengths over the one and one-half mile course on the Schuylkill river. The universities rowed against a three-quarters head wind the entire distance. Time, 8 minute, 6 seconds.

Yale reversed matters in the preliminary race for second eights, winning from the Pennsylvania juniors by one and one-quarter lengths in 8:18 2-5. Yale for the first time used an English shell and English oars. Never in the history of rowing on the Schuylkill has a crowd of such magnitude witnessed a boat race here. Fully 15,000 persons saw the contest. The race left no doubt about the superiority of the Pennsylvania eight. The race for the varsity regulars was delayed until after 5 o'clock to let the wind calm down.

Both crews got an exceptionally good start, the Yale men getting their oars into the water a fraction of a second ahead of Pennsylvania's. Yale [illegible] with a stroke of 33 to the minute and Pennsylvania with 32. At the end of the first half-mile, Pennsylvania was a half-length ahead of Yale, and the latter ran their strokes up to 36, Pennsylvania raising hers to 34. The red and blue continued to gain and at the end of the mile open water began to show between the two shells.

In an effort to overtake Pennsylvania, Captain How put the Yale stroke up to 38, Pennsylvania being content with 34. Yale spurted the next quarter of a mile and for a few strokes managed to hold Pennsylvania. Then the Pennsylvanians, without increasing their stroke, kept drawing away. A quarter of a mile from the finish Yale made a final effort and ran her stroke up to 40. Pennsylvania responded with a stroke of 38, which her crew held to the finish, while Yale ran hers up to 42. Pennsylvania made a very strong finish, and when the eight crossed the finish line [illegible] a length of open water [illegible] between the two shells. Yale was a strong 2 to 1 favorite before the [illegible].

The summary follows:

Varsity eight-oared race, 1½ miles. Won by Pennsylvania. Hoagland, bow; Rogers, 2; Shelling, 3; Brettinger, 4; Walton, 5; Shoemaker, captain, 6; Braddock, 7; Ballard, stroke; Westcott, coxswain.

Second—Yale. Rice, bow; Glenny, 2; Brainard, 3; Wallis, 4; Modell, 5; Hyde, 6; Mill, 7; Howe, captain, stroke; Cas[illegible], coxswain. [illegible] 8:06 and 8:12.

Second eight-oared race, 1½ miles. Won by Yale. Thomas, bow; [illegible], 2; Vanderpool, 3; Colwin, 4; Baker, 5; Peterson, 6; Holloway, 7; Brooks, stroke; Fearing, coxswain.

Second — Pennsylvania. Brown, bow; Heisler, 2; Ferguson, 3; Marx, 4; Rassas, 5; Thompson, 6; Bennett, 7; Stiles, stroke; Rittengarten, coxswain. Time, 8:18 2-5 and 8:24. Referee, C. B. Wood of Harvard.

AGGIES DECIDE NOT TO PLAY HESTER AND POTTS

Dean E. S. Parsons, chairman of the Faculty Athletic conference of Colorado college, was notified last night that the Aggies would bar Haster, third baseman, and Potts, shortstop, from their lineup in next Saturday's game here. Both players were protested by the Tigers. With Haster and Potts out of the game, the Aggies will be pulled down to a level with the Springs lads [illegible] Colorado College should win.

LIVELY WEEK IN SPORTS

With baseball and track athletics waking up, this promises to be a busy week for the fans. Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, on Washburn field, the Colorado College Tigers will face the Pueblo Indians and make an effort to [illegible] their scalps, lost a week ago yesterday. [illegible] and Van Stone will do the flinging for the locals.

Friday afternoon, the Marathon preliminary will be run at Washburn field, in conjunction with the annual High School [illegible] day [illegible].

Saturday afternoon the Tigers will open the intercollegiate season here with a game with the Aggies. If the college ball tossers can win Saturday's game, they will be the favorites for the pennant.

TROTTING QUEEN ABROAD

Lou Dillon to Tour Europe—Billings' Horses Will Be Missed on Grand Circuit.

NEW YORK, April 10.—With the European turf invaded this year by American thoroughbreds, great interest is attached to the shipping abroad of Lou Dillon, the "trotting queen," and other harness turf celebrities from the stables of C. K. G. Billings, millionaire horseman of Chicago.

This sturdy little mare, who holds the world's record of 1:58½, is to be exhibited this summer in Berlin, St. Petersburg, Budapest, Vienna and other cities.

Mr. Billings intends to tour the whole of Europe this year and he will take his horses to the various cities with him. Mr. Billings did not go with the horses, but will leave within a few days on his yacht Vanadis.

The news that Mr. Billings has shipped abroad will come as a surprise to the followers of the trotting and pacing turf. This means that his horses will not be seen on the Grand Circuit or elsewhere in this country this year. It is the intention of Mr. Billings to merely exhibit his horses on the other side. He never races for other than ribbons here, and will pursue the same course on the other side of the ocean. His horses go direct to Berlin. Some weeks will be spent in getting them tuned up for action on the track.

YALE WINS MEET FROM VIRGINIA

NEW HAVEN IS VICTORIOUS BY SCORE OF 86 TO 31.

Rector Runs 100-Yard Dash in Nine and Three-Quarter Seconds. Track [illegible] Fast.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, N. C., April 10.—The dual meet between Yale and Virginia, at the University of Virginia grounds, resulted in an easy victory for the New Haven team. Yale won a total of 86 points, as against 31 for Virginia. Yale won all the places in six events, the mile run, two-mile run, pole vault, hammer throw, shot put and broad jump.

James A. Rector, America's premier sprinter, won the 100 and the 220 yard dashes with the greatest ease. The track was fast, with a strong wind aiding the runners in the sprint.

The summary:

One hundred-yard dash—J. A. Rector, Va., first; R. W. Burke, Va., second; A. G. Heidrick, Yale, third. Time, 9 4-5.

Two hundred and twenty-yard dash—James A. Rector, Va., first; F. Q. Stanton, Va., second; A. G. Heidrick, Yale, third. Time, 21 4-5.

Four hundred and forty-yard dash—Forrest Q. Stanton, Va., first; M. Viles, Yale, second; E. Seymour, Yale, third. Time, :51 3-5.

Mile run—A. Cores, Yale, first; R. L. [illegible], Yale, second; R. A. [illegible], Yale, third. Time, 4:35 1-5.

Eight hundred and eighty-yard run—E. A. Spitzer, Yale, first; M. Kirjassoff, Yale, second; Turner Wiltshire, Va., third. Time, [illegible].

One hundred and twenty-yard hurdle—L. V. Howe, Yale, first; Lawrence Martin, Va., second; Archie C. Randolph, Va., third. Time, :15 2-5.

Two hundred and twenty-yard hurdle—L. V. Howe, Yale, first; L. K[illegible], Yale, second; L. Martin, Va., third. Time, :25 1-5.

High jump—W. Canfield, Yale, first, height, 5 feet, 10 inches; Martin A. Randolph and Edwin Holt[illegible] tied for second place at 5 feet, 8 inches.

Broad jump—R. Kilpatrick, Yale, first; C. Baird, Yale, second; E. H. Reynolds, Yale, third. Distance, 22 feet, 4 inches.

Pole vault—F. [illegible], Yale, first; C. Campbell, Yale, second; E. Reynolds, Yale, third. Height, 12 feet.

Hammer throw—C. C. [illegible], Yale, first; W. [illegible], Yale, second; A. H. Andrus, Yale, third. Distance, 140 feet, 1½ inches.

Two-mile event—M. Lightner, Yale, first; A. L. [illegible], Yale, second; W[illegible], Yale, third. Time, 9:58.

GOTCH WILL RETIRE AFTER YUSSIFF MATCH

Champion Wrestler Yearns for Scent of Clover and Hum of Bees

Frank Gotch, who will defend his wrestling title against Yussiff Mahmout at Dexter park pavilion on April 14, plans to retire from the mat after his match with Hackenschmidt in Australia next January.

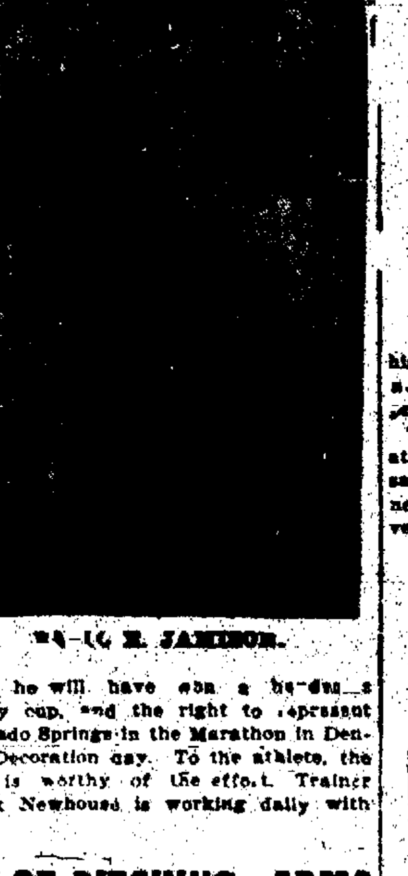

In the old days champions did not retire until they were beaten and their drawing power gone, and usually retired practically penniless, early candidates for a benefit. In these days of larger purses and thrift on the part of champions, it has become the fashion for pugilists, wrestlers, ball players, and other sporting men to seek rest undefeated and with enough wealth to keep them comfortably.

The Humboldt, Ia., farmer, who has accumulated $100,000 just because none can put him on his back under the approved rules of wrestling, philosophizes along this line: "Seriously speaking, I long for the day when I can watch my corn growing and see my Poland-China swine preparing themselves for a $7.30 market at the Chicago stockyards. I have invested my savings in Iowa farm land, and I now own more than 1,000 acres. I expect to step on to the mat with Mahmout weighing about [illegible] pounds. I was [illegible] too thin when I met Hackenschmidt, about 196 pounds. He will weigh close to 200, I suppose. It will be a fair and square match, and I would like to have Ed Smith, who refereed the match with Hack, again act as third man in the ring, because of the criticism that were made abroad of the Hackenschmidt match."

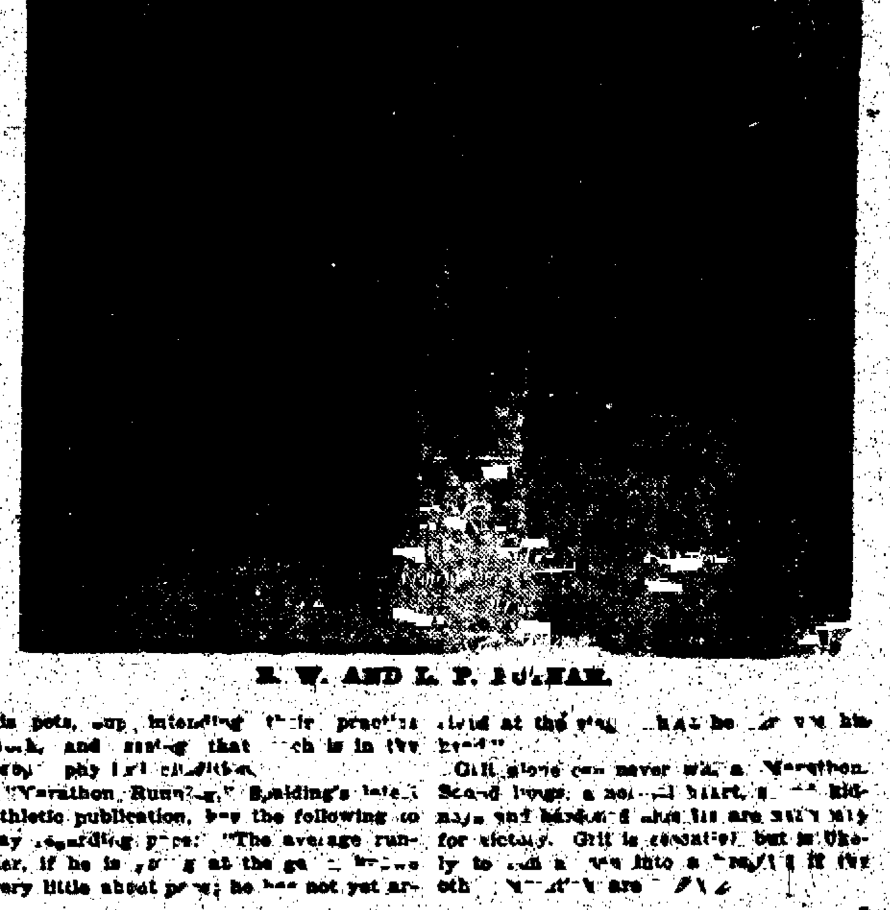

TRIO OF FAVORITE COLORADO COLLEGE MARATHON ENTRIES

Clean limbed, well trained and in the very pink of condition, eight Colorado College runners are ready for the biggest athletic event of their lives, a 10½ mile Marathon at Washburn field next Friday afternoon. Jardine, champion collegiate half-mile man; Gibbs, long-distance runner of [illegible] years' experience; Pollock, who has worked for years on high school and college tracks; Bu[illegible], another veteran trackman; Ja[illegible], a crack college runner; Walter Johnson and the two Putnam brothers will be found on the cinder path, straining their ears for the signal when the starter's pistol cracks at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon.

Round and round the track these ambitious athletes will run 42 times, and when the winner staggers over the tape at the finish he will have won a handsome trophy cup, and the right to represent Colorado Springs in the Marathon in Denver, Decoration day. To the athlete, the goal is worthy of the effort. Trainer Frank Newhouse is working daily with his pets, [illegible] intending their practice [illegible] and [illegible] that [illegible] is in the [illegible] physical condition.

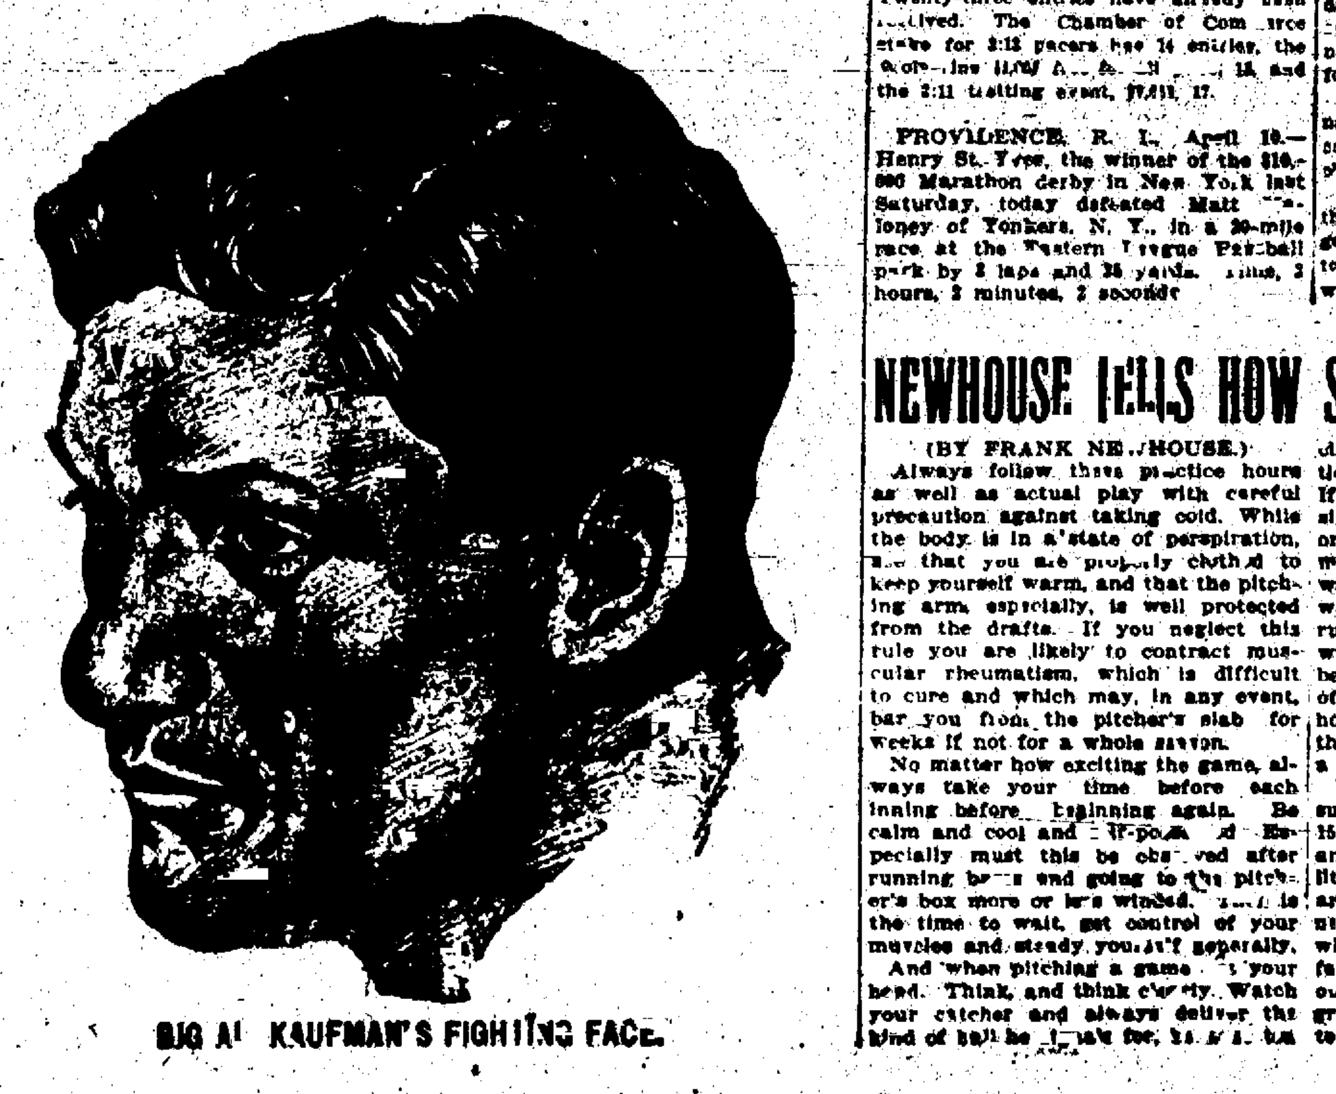

[illegible] E. JAMISON.

E. W. AND L. P. PUTNAM.

"Marathon Running," Spalding's latest athletic publication, has the following to say regarding pace: "The average runner, if he is going at the game, knows very little about pace; he has not yet arrived at the stage [illegible] he [illegible] his head."

Grit alone can never win a Marathon. Sound lungs, a normal heart, [illegible] kidneys and hardened muscles are still vital for victory. Grit is essential, but is likely to [illegible] into a [illegible] if the other [illegible] are [illegible].

BIG AL KAUFMAN'S FIGHTING FACE.

(BY FRANK NEWHOUSE.)

Always follow these practice hours as well as actual play with careful precaution against taking cold. While the body is in a state of perspiration, see that you are properly clothed to keep yourself warm, and that the pitching arm, especially, is well protected from the drafts. If you neglect this rule you are likely to contract muscular rheumatism, which is difficult to cure and which may, in any event, bar you from the pitcher's slab for weeks if not for a whole season.

No matter how exciting the game, always take your time before each inning before beginning again. Be calm and cool and self-possessed. Especially must this be observed after running bases and going to the pitcher's box more or less winded. Then is the time to wait, get control of your muscles and steady yourself generally.

And when pitching a game use your head. Think, and think clearly. Watch your catcher and always deliver the kind of ball he signals for, [illegible] chances to one he knows the peculiarities of the batter better than you do. If you differ with him, give him your signal of dissent, a nod of the head or whatever the prearranged signal may be, and, if he insists, I have always found it best to let him have his way. When there are two out and a runner on third base, deliver the ball without the long swing of the body, because it gives the runner too much of an advantage in a start for the home plate while you are going through the gyrations of the usual prelude to a delivery.

Now as to the care of the arm, be sure and have it massaged for at least 15 minutes before beginning to play, and, if possible, have it rubbed up a little between each inning if there is any tendency whatever toward [illegible] or stiffness. But no matter whether this is done, the pitcher who fails to have his arm [illegible] thoroughly and skillfully after a hard, gruelling game will [illegible] to pay [illegible].

Having massaged the arms of 400 different ball players during the last six years, I know something of what I am writing in this respect.

Thus, in massaging the tendon sprained by a curved ball, I take the injured lesion between the thumb and first finger, and holding the arm firmly with the other hand, work the tendon until all the swelling is removed by the friction, taking care to keep the thumb and finger moist with a little oil or vaseline. For an injury to the upper tendon caused by throwing the drop ball, I take it firmly between the first fingers and thumb of both hands and, while the arm rests securely upon the edge of a table or equally solid stand, work the tendon thoroughly through its entire length until it has again assumed its normal [illegible] and the arm feels supple again. For the back and the shoulder muscles, I work them thoroughly with both hands. This is the only way that a player [illegible] be developed and [illegible] through a [illegible] season.

FRIENDS PAY TRIBUTE TO THE LATE MISS BACHELDOR

Funeral services for the late Miss Carrie A. Bacheldor were conducted yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, in Grace church by the Rev. Henry Rutgers Remsen, the rector. The pallbearers were: James P. Barnes, Albert B. Meservey, Frank Cotten, Charles P. Bennett and James Auld of Colorado Springs, and I. H. Low of Denver, formerly of this city. Mr. Low was a life-long friend of Miss Bacheldor and he came here expressly to attend her funeral.

The casket was completely covered with the choicest of Easter lilies, hyacinths, roses, sprengali and smilax, the affectionate tribute of many friends.

Robert E. West, nephew of Miss Bacheldor, left for Waukegan, Ill., last night with the remains and the final services will be at the family plot in the cemetery there.

Mrs. N. T. Cruise of Boise, Ida., is the guest of her relatives, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Read, 116 St. Vrain court.

ENTERTAINS PUPILS AT A PIANO RECITAL

Mrs. C. F. Spangenberg of 708 North Weber street, entertained the younger pupils of her piano class at a recital last Thursday afternoon. She was assisted by Miss Dorothy Adams, Miss Frances Lewis and Miss Opal Moss, who gave piano solos and duets. Those taking part were Eleanor Whitehead, Vera Gouker, Fern Stevens, Helen Strang, Myrtle Robertson, Maud Philow, Helen Wooden, Gladys Smith, Chloe Barney, Harold Safranek and John McElroy.

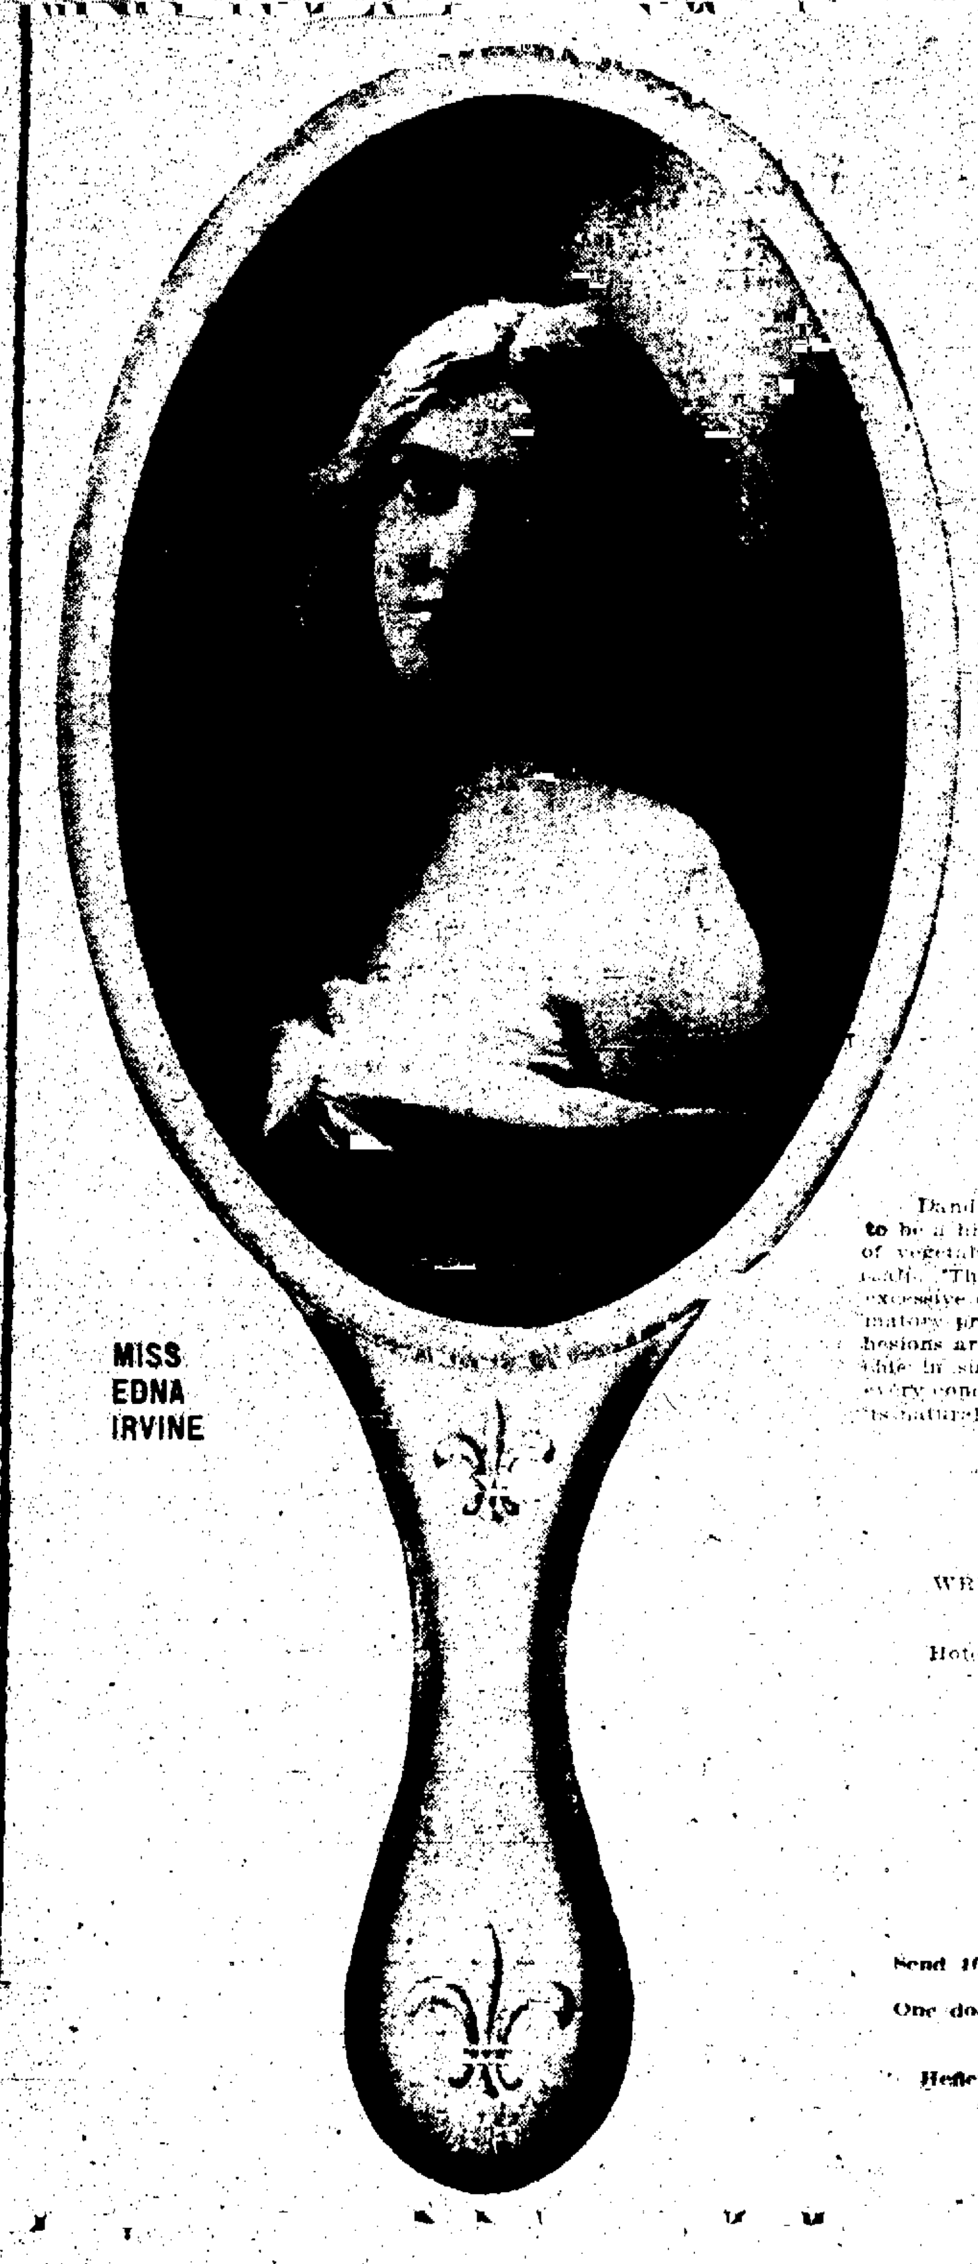

MANY BUILDING PERMITS

Permits for building improvements aggregating $2,700 have been granted thus far this month by the building inspector's department of the city engineer's office, as follows:

F. W. Cragin, frame cottage and rustic cabin at 1709 Wood avenue, $500; D. C. Work, frame cottage at 514 South Institute, $400; Charles Lucas, frame cottage at 938 East Costilla, $1,500; D. R. Blood, frame addition at 17 West Fountain, $300.

POTATOES MAY SOON BE LUXURY IN SPRINGS

Potatoes, considered a food necessity, are likely to be classed as a luxury if prices go soaring any higher. They are now retailing at $2.25 per 100 pounds, and indications point to an advance in one leap to $2.75. This, the dealers say, is due to the prolonged drouth in Texas and the scarcity of the Colorado product. New potatoes are beginning to arrive from the south, but the usual output is delayed about 30 days.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

The Original Remedy that "Kills the Dandruff Germ"

Dandruff, with its consequent hair injury and hair loss, is now known to be a highly contagious germ disease. It is caused by an invisible growth of vegetable character that finds lodgment in the sebaceous glands of the scalp. This growth disturbs the functions of the sebaceous glands, causing excessive oiliness or extreme dryness of the hair. It also sets up an inflammatory process that extends down the follicle to the papilla, where the adhesions are loosened and the hair slips out. The value of Newbro's Herpicide in such cases is quite extraordinary. Its intelligent use will correct every condition short of chronic baldness and thus permit the hair to resume its natural luster and abundance.

GASOLINE MOTOR CAR TESTS SUCCESSFUL

The first of the gasoline motor cars to be run over the Colorado division of the Santa Fe yesterday passed through La Junta en route to California. If the test proves as successful on the grades there as it has in Kansas, the cars will probably be installed over the entire system.

There is a report in circulation to the effect that the motor cars may be installed this summer between Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo to handle the local traffic. The cars are built of steel, will seat 75 passengers, are 55 feet in length and weigh 60,000 pounds.

Better Than Spanking

Spanking does not cure children of bedwetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble. Mrs. M. Summers, Box W, South Bend, Ind., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment, with full instructions. Send no money, but write her today if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

FEDERAL BUILDING WORK IS TO BE PUSHED FORWARD

Stone work on the new federal building which has been delayed until labor difficulties in Denver were adjusted, will be resumed tomorrow morning. It is expected that this part of the construction will be completed within a month. J. H. Wiese of South Omaha, Neb., contractor for the building, was called home yesterday by the death of a relative.

DEATH DUTIES

Is Proposed Inheritance Tax Fair

When Thirty-six States Already Have One? ... How the State Laws Vary. Adding a Federal Tax in Some States Would Double the Rate Up to 20 Per Cent ... What the Great Multimillionaires Would Pay. Rockefeller's Estate ... Would Amount to $24,000,000.

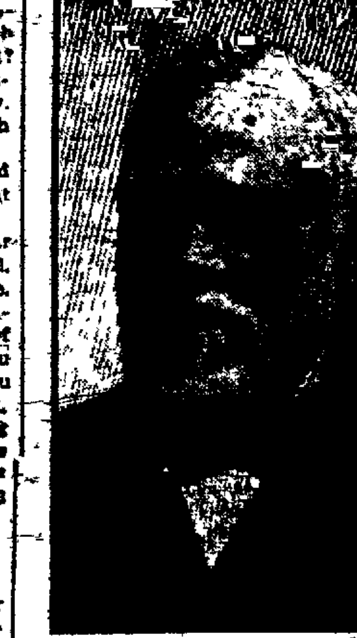

THERE being an inheritance tax in thirty-six states already, is it fair for the federal government to add the death duties provided for in the Payne bill? This is one of the most serious questions now confronting the country. Have you had time yet to give it much thought?

There are many arguments pro and con. But let us first see just what death duties the Payne bill imposes.

You must pay the government 5 per cent of all property, real and personal, which you may inherit from an uncle, aunt, cousin or other "collateral" relation, or from any stranger in blood. Of such property above $10,000 which you may inherit from a direct relative you must pay from 1 per cent to 3 per cent, according to a sliding scale, depending upon the amount. Thus 1 per cent is ... on from $10,000 to ..., 2 per cent on from $100,000 to $500,000, 3 per cent on all above $500,000.

Degrees of Relationship.

Under relatives paying this smaller rate of 1 per cent to 3 per cent on $10,000 or over are included the lineal descendants of the deceased, including his children, grandchildren or great-grandchildren; also his parents, brothers and sisters, sons-in-law, daughters in law, stepchildren, adopted children and those to whom the deceased has been on the "mutually acknowledged relation of a parent." This last named class would let in many protegés were it not for the fact that it is stipulated that this "relation of a parent" must have commenced before each such child's fifteenth birthday, and for the further fact that such persons or children of this class must have lived before such relationship ... Besides those named, all other heirs must pay 5 per cent, one-twentieth of all inheritances above $500. In other words, all children whose father or mother has remarried and left them to the care of uncles or aunts, who have not legally adopted them, are shut out of the smaller rate on inheritances from those uncles and aunts, provided the remarrying parent has survived after their fifteenth year.

ANDREW CARNEGIE,
His Death Would Enrich the Public Treasury by $16,000,000.

GEORGE J. GOULD,
His Heirs Would Pay $4,000,000

Where It Will Double the Tax.

Now, as we said, thirty-six states—all save ten—already have inheritance taxes of their own, and these yield a total annual revenue of about $10,000,000. In these states, therefore, the new bill will impose a double tax. The only ones which have none are Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, Rhode Island and South Carolina. In these ten states and the continental territories, including the District of Columbia then there would be only one inheritance tax to pay—the federal—should this provision of the Payne bill go through.

In the other thirty-six states, also Porto Rico and Hawaii, which already have inheritance taxes, the doubling would have varying effect, due to the great variety of state laws. There would be no doubling in the Philippines, however, since the Payne bill specifically excepts that dependency.

Double Rate Reaches 20 Per Cent.

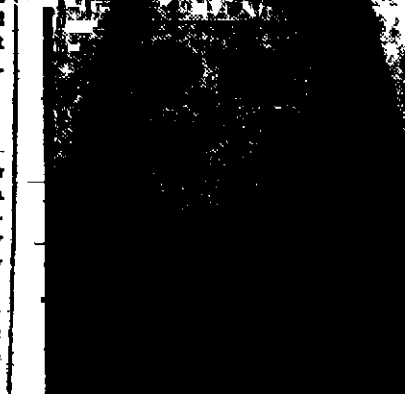

And let us see how some of these thirty-six states, already having inheritance taxes, would be affected by the doubling. In California, Idaho, North Carolina and Wisconsin the possible assessment on big legacies to collateral relatives or strangers would go up to a maximum of 20 per cent, or one fifth since those states have sliding scales or "progressive" scales up to a maximum rate of 15 per cent. This 15 per cent added to the federal 5 per cent would make the 20 per cent mentioned. In Texas and Washington state there would be a possible collateral tax of 17 per cent, since those states already have a maximum of 12 per cent.

In South Dakota the collateral maximum is 10 per cent, which, added to the federal flat rate of 5 per cent, makes 15 per cent. As will be seen from the accompanying table, the remaining states have collateral rates varying from 1½ per cent to 7½ per cent. In twenty states the collateral legacies exempted from taxation are $500, the Payne bill's limit, or below. In some cases there is no exemption whatever. So much for collateral heirs.

As to Near Relatives.

What concerns the great mass of the people more is the rate on inheritance from lineal heirs. As stated above, the Payne bill assesses none of these on less than $10,000. Not all the states with taxes on lineal legacies are as liberal as this. In Wisconsin and North Carolina and Michigan only $2,000 is exempted. In California and Idaho, $4,000, in Oregon and South Dakota, $5,000 and in Montana, $7,500. Sixteen of the states, however, have collateral but no lineal taxes. This leaves twenty where the assessments on direct heirs will be doubled if the Payne bill retains its inheritance tax feature. So what will the doubling on lineals amount to in these states? In California it can amount to from 2 to 6 per cent, in Colorado, 2 to 5, Connecticut 1½ to 3½, Idaho 2 to 6, Louisiana 3 to 5, Massachusetts 2 to 3, Minnesota 2½ to 8, North Carolina, 1¾ to 3¾, Utah 6 to 8, Wisconsin ... to 6, Wyoming, 3 to 5 and 2 to 4 in the following which have a flat rate of 1 per cent for lineals: Illinois, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New York, Oregon, South Dakota, Washington and West Virginia. The state which the proposed federal law will hit hardest is Utah, which has a flat rate of 5 per cent on direct inheritances above $10,000. In that state a man's widow and orphans will have to pay from 6 per cent to 8 per cent on what he leaves them above $10,000.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER,
Before He Began Wearing a Wig. His Estate Would Be Assessed $24,000,000.

HETTY GREEN,
Her Death Duties Would Total $4,000,000.

How State Laws Vary.

In thirteen states the inheritance tax is progressive on a sliding scale of percentages, increasing as the amount increases. In five states this progressive rate is for both direct and collateral heirs. In six it is progressive for distant relatives and strangers in blood only. Two—Minnesota and Utah—make no distinction between direct and collateral heirs. In all others in which direct heirs are taxed at all the rates are much lower than for collateral heirs or strangers in blood, and the amount exempted from taxation is much larger for direct than for collateral heirs, except in Connecticut, where it is $10,000 for both and North Carolina, where it is $2,000 for both. The new constitution of Oklahoma expressly authorized progressive taxation for both direct and collateral heirs.

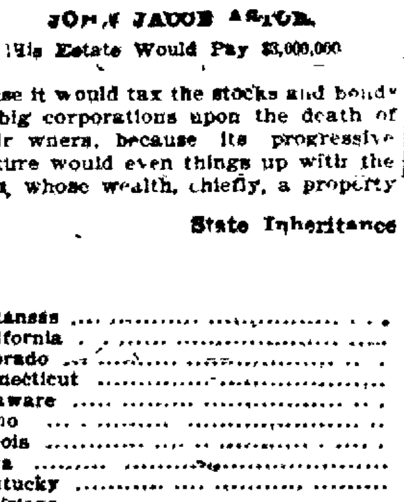

What a Great Authority Says.

So the question whether this double taxation in thirty-six states is fair will be debated throughout the length and breadth of this land during the spring and late in the summer. Dr. Max West of Columbia University, New York, who was perhaps the greatest authority on the inheritance tax in this country, ... who died some weeks ago just after completing the second edition of his exhaustive treatise on the question, said: "... Although the form of double taxation is far less objectionable in practice than the levying of both state and local taxes on property ... locally, yet it might be said to argue, if not a breach of federal comity, at least a certain lack of system in the nation's finances." Dr. West suggested that congress should leave the inheritance tax exclusively to the states, and should tax interstate business instead—should reach the proceeds of interstate commerce, which are out of the effective reach of the states. The legislature of Wisconsin in 1901 memorialized congress to repeal the Spanish war inheritance tax and pointed out that if the law remained "a large amount of property in the country will be subject to double taxation."

The constitutionality of the state inheritance tax laws has been repeatedly tested in the courts and has usually been sustained. Those which have had to be reframed have had some specific flaw, although sound in principle. When our first national inheritance tax, that of the civil war, came before the federal supreme court, where it was held to be a direct tax and therefore unconstitutional, the court held it to be an excise and therefore constitutional. Again our Spanish war inheritance tax—the stamp tax on probates of wills and letters of administration—was attacked on the ground that the federal government was without authority to tax the transmission or receipt of property, but the supreme court denied that the states' power of regulation was what was taxed. The supreme court has also denied the contention that the progressive scale of the Illinois state inheritance tax violated the fourteenth amendment. In this case Justice Brewer gave the only dissenting opinion. Thus was it ... by the highest tribunal of ... that progressive taxation is not a denial of the equal protection of the laws. But the constitutionality of the exemption ... of inheritance taxes seems to be ... hanging fire.

Summing up the principal criticisms of the proposed death duty, we find it condemned because it would be class discrimination; because it would constitute not only double but triple taxation in states which have such a tax levied in the same year with a property tax; because it would cause hardships in cases of deaths in quick succession; because it would therefore be unjust to families with low hereditary rates of longevity; because it is a "tax on widows and orphans;" because it discourages ... and thrift and drives away capital; because it is easily evaded by gifts during life and because not all estates are prepared for ready money at the time that it would fall due.

The arguments for it are quite as varied. It is praised because it would be a tax according to the ability of the taxpayer and a means of collecting taxes which have been evaded by property owners during their lives, because it would minimize chances of fraud being payable while property is passing under the eye of the probate court, and would therefore be an improved method of reaching personal property otherwise easily hidden, because it would tax the stocks and bonds of big corporations upon the death of their owners, because its progressive feature would even things up with the rich, whose wealth, chiefly, a property tax fails to reach; because it would be a capitalized income tax paid once in a generation instead of once a year; because it would be paid after death and hence at the time most convenient for the taxpayer; and because it would encourage the distribution of ... fortunes during the lives of owners and thus tend toward a better distribution of wealth.

JOHN JACOB ASTOR,
His Estate Would Pay $3,000,000

One of its staunchest advocates is Andrew Carnegie, who once declared in favor of a schedule rising as high as 50 per cent where big fortunes are concerned. And Theodore Roosevelt in his address flaying the muck rakers predicted that we should ultimately have to consider a "progressive tax on all fortunes beyond a certain amount, either given in life or devised or bequeathed upon death," an idea upon which he elaborated in his message of 1906.

How the multimillionaires would be affected by the proposed law is interesting to consider. On the basis of a table giving the alleged fortunes of our richest men—a table said to have been recently compiled by a New York financier—it can be computed that the following amounts of inheritance tax would result from a doubling of the New York state law and proposed federal law, presupposing of course, that these millionaires' estates at their present figure were entirely settled in New York and were left intact to their children. The heirs of John D. Rockefeller would have to pay $24,000,000, of Andrew Carnegie, $16,000,000; of William Rockefeller $8,000,000, of J P Morgan, $6,000,000, of Hetty Green, H M Flagler and W A Clark, each $4,000,000; of John Jacob Astor, $3,000,000; of George J. Gould, $2,500,000, and of H A Havemeyer, $2,000,000.

Of these amounts the state of New York would receive one-fourth and the federal government three-fourths, the New York state inheritance tax for lineal descendants being a flat rate of 1 per cent, while the proposed federal rate is 3 per cent for legacies over $500,000.

New York state now derives an annual revenue of about $5,000,000 from inheritance tax; this equals the receipts from the same source of all the other thirty-five states put together.

CHARTER GOVERNMENT IN DES MOINES.

DES MOINES, IOWA, which was one of the first cities to follow the example of Galveston in breaking away from the old system of government and establishing the commission form, has just completed the first year of administration under the new plan. Inasmuch as the Des Moines plan is very much like the system provided in the new proposed Charter for Colorado Springs, the success or failure of the Iowa city's experiment is a matter of no little interest here. In order that our people may know how the plan works in actual practice, the Gazette has secured from a newspaper writer in Des Moines a comprehensive review of the first year's administration. This article, by Mr. J. L. Wright, is printed on the first page of today's paper, and the showing he makes is decidedly gratifying to all who look to the new charter for relief from present evils. It should be added that Mr. Wright's account is entirely impartial. Our only instructions to him were to send an accurate summary of the results actually achieved, and if his story is altogether favorable to the commission form it is simply because the facts are on that side.

Des Moines has about 90,000 population. Under the old form of government it had been going constantly deeper into debt, each administration leaving affairs in a little worse condition than when it took charge. The streets were unkempt and neglected, vice and crime flourished, and the whole system was characterized by the same extravagance and inefficiency that is common to nearly every American city.

Perhaps conditions were no worse in Des Moines than in any one of a hundred other cities that might be named, but certainly they were no better. At any rate, they were bad enough to cause a general demand for a change, and in response to this demand the commission plan was adopted. The Des Moines charter is the result of legislative enactment, for in Iowa the laws do not permit the people of a city to make their own charters, as is the case in Colorado. But nevertheless it is clear that they got an excellent charter.

HOW IT WORKS IN DES MOINES. Mr. Wright shows that for the first time in seventeen years and the second time in the history of the city the administration has been run for an entire year within its income. This achievement is all the more remarkable because of the newness of the administration, and encourages the belief that after the system has been in force enough to insure greater familiarity with the methods of application an even greater saving will be effected. In every case expenditures were kept within the appropriations, an unprecedented proceeding. By way of contrast it is well to note that the last administration under the old system exceeded its income by $80,000.

This financial showing would in itself justify the change to the commission plan but it appears that the benefits now enjoyed by Des Moines are not limited to the proper care of its revenues and expenditures. The streets have been kept clean, the rates charged for street lighting, both gas and electric, have been lowered and steps have been taken to secure lower water rates for consumers from the water company. Vice and crime have been kept in check and the social evil which theretofore had attained alarming proportions has been suppressed in some parts of the city and well regulated elsewhere. In its dealings with public service corporations the administration has been more successful than ever before in protecting the rights of the people.

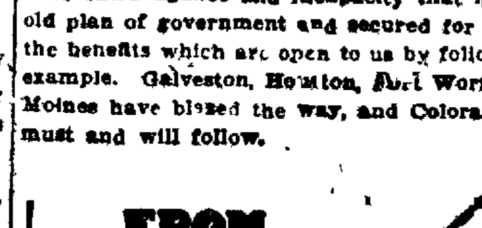

AN END OF PARTISAN POLITICS. Not the least of the blessings has been the elimination of partisan politics. This is a point of especial interest in Colorado Springs because of the provision in our proposed charter for the same procedure. Mr. Wright declares that in Des Moines the city hall has been transformed from a loafing place and headquarters for professional politicians into an institution for the conduct of business. "There are no politicians there and it is free from political influence. The non-partisan nomination and non-partisan election put the old political machine in the junk heap and there have been no political debts paid with public jobs." This is a matter of the utmost importance for a very large share of the municipal ills from which Colorado Springs suffers are directly traceable to too much partisan politics and if Des Moines has succeeded within a year after the adoption of this new plan of government in "sending the political machine to the junk heap" we are at least justified in hoping for equal success under the charter.

Of course there are people in Des Moines who do not like the new plan of government. This is inevitable, and it is not altogether regrettable. The plan was opposed both before and after its adoption by the professional politicians, corporation fixers and other enemies of clean government who knew that its adoption would put them out of business. Such men will continue their opposition to the end of the chapter, and it is altogether creditable to the new plan that they are opposed to it. Indeed, their approval would immediately excite suspicion of weakness in the commission plan.

IT IS UP TO COLORADO SPRINGS. In a few weeks Colorado Springs will have a chance to adopt a charter which in every respect is as good as the Des Moines charter and in some ways better. This charter represents the best thought and effort of twenty-one of our foremost citizens. For two months they gave a large portion of their time to its compilation and it is our honest belief that if six months instead of sixty days had been allowed for the work, and if instead of these men any other twenty-one men or women in town had been chosen for the work, the result would not have been a whit better.

Perhaps it is entirely possible to pick flaws in the proposed charter. But remember this: Perfection is not attained on this earth. Even the Constitution of the United States, which Gladstone called "the most perfect instrument ever struck off by the mind of man at a given time and place," has its imperfections. It is not humanly possible for any body of men to agree on a code of set rules of government which shall be absolutely flawless, simply because there is no one man or set of men, however wise and patriotic they may be that can foresee all of the possibilities of the future. In every nation, state and city, conditions are constantly arising that could not be foreseen by the makers of the laws under which we live. All we can do—all that anybody can do—is to secure the best thought, the best effort, the best patriotism obtainable for the making of a charter, and then, as Washington said after the Constitutional Convention had finished its work, "the event is in the hands of God."

The Charter Convention of Colorado Springs has submitted to the people a thoroughly good code of laws, and the people can not afford to reject it, for if they do it will be a long time before they get anything better, or perhaps as good. The Charter has been framed in the interests of the people; the provisions on which the fight against it is to be made—regulation of public service corporations and elimination of partisan politics—are absolutely wise and just. They are designed solely to protect the people, and after all it is the people, and not the politicians or the corporations, who pay the bills and who gain or lose according to the efficiency or inefficiency of our government. We have before us the example of several progressive cities that have freed themselves from the mire of corruption, extravagance and incapacity that marked the old plan of government and secured for themselves the benefits which are open to us by following their example. Galveston, Houston, Fort Worth and Des Moines have blazed the way, and Colorado Springs must and will follow.

EUCALYPTUS.

From the Boston Transcript.

California, the Golden state, has recently, in the picturesque phrase of a promoter, "entered upon its third golden era," golden metal and golden fruits being now supplanted in public interest by the "golden hardwood" eucalyptus. Some scores of corporations and individuals are planting the trees; municipalities are setting them out by the hundreds on public lands; an eastern firm of furniture manufacturers has purchased 4,000 acres near Sacramento, with the view to cultivate its own wood supply, and high officials of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe have incorporated to plant eucalyptus on an 8,000-acre tract in San Diego county, purposing to provide the road with poles, piles, ties, etc. Meantime, the boom is helped on by such facts as that "Australian mahogany" (eucalyptus rostrata) is genuinely in demand for finish flooring and cabinet work, at $130 a thousand; and that "blue gum" (eucalyptus globulus) makes a very profitable crop even when sold for fuel, a ranchman at Claremont having recently netted $478 from 47 trees only five years old.

Australian miners seem to have introduced the tree to this country, its natural habitat being Australia. About 150 species are known, and perhaps a third have become acclimated to southern California, where they find the mild and equable climate in which alone they can flourish. Some species grow taller than any other tree, rising at times to a height of more than 400 feet, others are superlatively rapid growers, seedling plantations having reached a maximum development of five inches in diameter and 67 feet in height in four years. In practically all the species the wood is heavy, hard and tough, "very little inferior in strength and stiffness to the best second-growth hickory." Eucalyptus probably serves more useful purposes, says the department of agriculture, than trees of any other genus grown on the globe except perhaps, the various palms. In Australia, the timber enters into the construction of ships, bridges, railroads, piers, telegraph lines, fences, paving, vehicles, agricultural implements, furniture, barrels, and a great variety of finer articles, eucalyptus being indeed the chief source of hardwood supply. In California, where the tree seems to lose none of its valuable qualities the fever of experimentation still runs high and it is hardly time for a prognosis. But bearing in mind the fact that different species have different characteristics and, therefore peculiar adaptations, it seems safe to conclude that California has found new "gold mines" in her eucalyptus groves and that they will strongly reinforce our diminishing forests.

To the Editor of The Gazette.

We, as officers and members of Colorado Springs camp No. 7226, Modern Woodmen of America, request that you grant us space in your paper for the publishing of the following:

As members of the Modern Woodmen we wish to express ourselves, relative to the article appearing in this morning's Gazette pertaining to the appropriation voted by the City Council for the entertainment of visiting members of our order. The account of the proceedings of the City Council as published on Tuesday, would imply that this appropriation had been made upon request of all the Modern Woodmen of Colorado Springs, when in fact, it appears to have been the request of only two or three members who are not members of Camp 7226, and in accordance with said request the warrant was to be made payable to one of their number. No members of this camp have been authorized to solicit any funds for this purpose.

The City Council may have thought that both camps and all the Modern Woodmen were to receive the benefits of this donation. Colorado Springs camp No. 7226 tendered the use of their hall, reading and reception rooms to the head officers for the free use of the state deputies and lectures for their school of instruction to be held here and letters from Head Consul A. R. Talbot of Lincoln, Neb., and Head Clerk C. W. Hawes of Rock Island, Ill., have been received by Camp 7226, thanking them for their offer. We were not aware that any request or appropriation had been made or asked for until the same was published in the city papers.

We fully appreciate the liberality and kindness of the people of Colorado Springs and wish to assure them that our order has no desire in any wise to become a burden upon the taxpayers, but will at all times do its part for the advancement and upbuilding of this community. We point with pride to the new hall lately completed and furnished by Camp 7226 of the Modern Woodmen of America and its reception and reading rooms and other conveniences connected therewith where some of its more than 900 members are ever present to extend a welcome to all visiting Woodmen.

WHERE ALL MEN ARE LIARS.

You know the good old warlike liar, who tells how often he was shot; you've seen the angling falsifier, who tells of fish he hasn't caught; the sportsmanlike prevaricator, who's hunted round the whole equator, and butchered snipe and alligator, and grouse and snakes and hippopot. The foot-race liar picks the cinders from out his feet, and talks away; the horseman knocks the truth to flinders, when bragging of his trotting bay; the honest farmer sometimes rises and shows how deeply he despises, the poor old truth, and emphasizes his feats at pitching hay. The greatest liar stands, immortal, and at such liars rudely laughs; their trifling efforts make him chortle, he ridicules them and he chaffs; he stands beyond all emulation, the Ananias of the nation; Napoleon of prevarication—the man who writes the epitaphs.

The Daily Chit-Chat

The fearful results that follow in the path of those women who persist in doing excessive needlework are every day manifest. Eye specialists thrive and grow fat in bank accounts on the mania of foolish women to do eyelet and French embroidery, Battenburg and lace work.

The eyes are the most precious of all human possessions and yet the most prodigally ill-used and maltreated of any member of the body.

I know a mother and two daughters who worked for five years on a wedding gown. It was intended to be fashioned for the bridal robe of the eldest sister, but the lot of old maidenhood falling to her, it was given to the younger sister. When completed it was said to be worth a thousand dollars.

Of course a real lace wedding gown is not possessed by every girl, but I thought the brightness of the young bride's eyes had been considerably dimmed in the making of its intricacies, and the necessity of wearing glasses surely did not compensate for even a lace wedding gown.

In the street cars we often seen women straining their eyes by reading a book through a closely meshed veil ornamented with dizzy black dots. It is bad enough to tire the eyes in reading when on a car, for the motion is exceedingly trying and hard on the optic nerve; the veil makes a combination unusually bad in its effects.

The terrific headaches that result from spending days at the department stores learning the mysteries of some new embroidery craze, are often serious in their permanent effects on the eyes.

Recently while waiting in the office of a famous oculist, I noticed a woman come in heavily veiled. The doctor told me afterwards that, suffering from a severe headache, this woman had gone to the corner drug store and secured a well-known headache powder. She took it, and not being relieved, took a second one as the directions permitted, and her headache disappeared like magic.

The next morning when she awoke she could see absolutely nothing. She tried to rise, but staggered and fell. Her frightened husband soon discovered the horrible truth—that she was blind!

The oculist told me that on examination he found the powerful opiate had entirely destroyed the optic nerves of one eye. He was working hard to see if he could not partially restore the sight of the other, but one at least was gone forever. "It ought to furnish a horrible lesson," he concluded, "to every woman on the folly of indiscriminately taking headache tablets or powders not prescribed by a regular physician."

Beat whites up stiffly and stir them gently in among the custard. When cool pour it over the cakes. Sprinkle over with cocoanut, cover with whipped and sweetened cream and serve cold.

Gingerbread.—Put quarter-pound butter into a saucepan, add half pound brown sugar, one cupful molasses, and half cupful milk, then melt them over the fire. Sift one and one-quarter pounds flour into a basin, add two teaspoonfuls ginger, one teaspoonful allspice, one teaspoonful ground cloves, one teaspoonful baking soda, quarter pound cleaned sultana raisins and two well beaten eggs. Add molasses mixture, mix well, pour into buttered and floured tin, bake in slow oven for one and half hours.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

MODERN life is so stressful and strenuous it would seem as though there was very little energy to be wasted in misunderstandings. For the plain duties of every day we need to conserve every particle of our strength and husband all our nervous and physical resources. Why is it, then, that there are so many people who from hour to hour and day to day drain and exhaust soul and body in the provocation of unnecessary conflict with those whose point of view is hopelessly divergent from their own?

If a principle is at stake, a man should be prepared to lay down life itself, if need be, in defense of his belief. "The noble army of martyrs" deserves commemoration and man's praise, and their deeds shines immortally. Whether they were right or wrong is not so much the question. They died for what they believed the truth to be. And not in great crises merely, but in the course of our ordinary lives, there are occasions when one must take one's stand and make one's choice, with no compromise or capitulation. "Tis man's perdition to be safe when for truth he ought to die." If a man purchases outward serenity and peace at the expense of some inward ignobility of concession, it spells damnation for his soul as clearly as any sin could do.

But where it is not a matter of principle, there is often needless controversy, simply because some people never learn that there is such a thing as bending without breaking, and that a man may give in for the time without giving up for always. Tactfulness, diplomacy often accomplishes more in 10 minutes than a month of bulldozing and browbeating is able to achieve. A recent Arctic explorer has said that the reason for failure to attain "furthest north" in the generality of cases was the leader's inability to manage men. Cecil Rhodes always wore the shabbiest hat to the directors' meetings of his companies, and always came away with what he wanted. That was because he knew how to overcome this man's crotchets and the other man's idiosyncracies with his infinite tact and urbanity. To try to get along in human society without these qualities is like trying to keep machinery in motion without oil.

To get along with people one must be conversant with their language and their peculiar dialect of that language. Honor among thieves is not quite the same thing as honor among honest men. "It takes two to speak the truth," says Thoreau, "one to speak the truth and one to hear it," and he meant by that, of course, that there must be a receptive medium as well as an audible sound. Otherwise it is a waste of time to speak. They that have ears to hear will do the hearing and no others.

Sometimes there are tragic misunderstandings where a word or two would set all right and yet that word remains unspoken. It may be false pride or undue sensitiveness that keeps one from explaining. The one who feels the first impulse toward explanation that may lead to reconciliation should give that impulse rein. Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. We sometimes let our resentments and reasonless suspicions smoulder beneath the surface consuming us inwardly, when it would be far better for our spiritual health to allow the fierce blaze of a moment's anger to burst forth. And then, our wrath being open and evident it would be possible to salve the wound or make atonement for the deed that was the cause of it.

People who get angry at you and never tell you why are the most difficult human beings to get along with. The best way is to make peace with thine adversary quickly, to go to him and request of him an explanation. More than half the time the result of such frankness will be the discovery that, after all there was no cause of quarrel—that it was due to a mere misunderstanding.

How grateful we are to any one who interprets us aright—to those who read our real motives and do not impute motives of which we are innocent. With some persons we know that we do not have to explain ourselves, that we shall be understood even before we speak a word, to their wisdom, is sufficient to make clear our intent. We are under no necessity of explaining at great length just what our motive might have been. The real friend knows us better than we know ourselves, and has more faith in us than in our life-long acquaintance with our own natures we have acquired.

Many misunderstandings are due to an unfortunate expression in a letter. Few misunderstandings survive the contact, face to face of honest men. A man's countenance is too eloquent in his own behalf or against him. His handclasp, his attitude, his manner tell you almost more than what he says. There are all kinds of overtones and undertones in conversations however that are lost on paper, and cannot be noted through the receiver and transmitter of the telephone. The best way to compound a difference is for the parties to the quarrel to meet in propria persona. It is astonishing how often furious wrath is appeased and apoplectic, paroxysmal anger reduced to the still, small voice of peace and harmony when "two strong men stand face to face." The meeting proves fatal to the misunderstanding.

SOUTHERN UPLANDS SUFFER FROM SOIL EROSION

From "The Waste from Soil Erosion in the South," by W. W. Ashe, in the Review of Reviews.

A yearly loss of many million dollars which need never take place; a loss not of one year, like that occasioned by a great fire, but one which has occurred year after year without interruption for decades; which in its aggregate, since the Civil war, nearly equals the national debt—this is the toll yearly exacted by erosion from the farm soils of the upland south.

The profits of the farmer noiselessly flow from his sloping fields into muddy streams. In spite of the large amount of loss, the tiller almost ignores it. He is, in fact, frequently ignorant of it. Yet this immense loss to the farmer represents only a portion of the actual damage, other industries suffer directly and indirectly from the same cause. On account of it there are in the dissected upland regions in the south more than 5,000,000 acres of land at one time cultivated and now idle. Many reasons have been assigned; the reduced fertility of the soils; the lure of the newer, more level, and more easily tilled lands of the west, economic changes which followed the Civil war, lack of labor and home markets. These have been secondary factors. Soil exhaustion and erosion are the fundamental causes. The exhausted "old fields," eroded, gullied, raw with deep wounds, and red, as though stained with carnage, need only the touch of knowledge to become revivified.

The causes which produced the old fields still operate to the ruin of much of the farming land. The decrease in the productivity of the farms of the eastern United States has been general. Nowhere has it been so evident as in the upland region of the south, where the loss is certainly not less than 30 per cent of the yield when the lands were fresh and new. Erosion is the basal problem which underlies soil exhaustion in this region, and so prevalent and so disastrous is it that it has become not only a serious local agricultural problem, but an important national problem as well, seriously affecting the value of many investments which have been made in the region. Its enormous extent has not been due entirely to poor cultural methods. The heavy rainfall, the physical characteristics of the region, the broken topography and the close textured soils, and in some measure also the economic conditions have contributed to increase it. Where methods of cultivation suited to the local conditions have been used, not only has erosion decreased, but the yields have responded in a wonderful manner, indicating that the soils are not only not inferior to those of other sections, but that, on account of the ample rainfall and the long growing season, they have many distinct advantages over those of other humid parts of the country.

DIGGING AND CONSTRUCTION EQUAL AT PANAMA

From "The Situation at Panama" by Forbes Lindsay, in the Review of Reviews.

Of the work remaining to be done the principal items are the completion of the cut through the divide and the erection of the locks. These will consume about the same length of time and may be depended upon to be finished in less than six years from the present. The latter task calls for an aggregate construction exceeding 5,000,000 cubic yards of concrete. This will be laid at the rate of 5,000 cubic yards a day, involving a daily consumption of 8,000 tons of material. The site of the channel through Gatun lake lies almost entirely at an elevation of 40 feet, or lower, so that no appreciable amount of excavation is required to establish it.

The Culebra cut must be brought down to elevation 40, which will place the bottom of the canal 45 feet below the summit level. In order to fill this requirement, 8,000,000 cubic yards, of which about 5,000,000 are in earth and the remainder in rock, must be removed. At the present rate of excavation this represents 55 months' work, but as the bottom of the cunette is approached progress will necessarily be retarded by the inability to apply as many shovels to the prism as are now employed. Considering all the conditions and allowing for slides and other impediments, the engineers are confident of reaching the required level before the end of 1914. It is impossible to convey a definite idea of the present elevation, because the excavation is being made on a double slope, the apex of which is at about elevation 90, while the ends are at the ultimate depth.

In respect to physical magnitude the transportation of spoil is the greatest feature of the work. Every shovelful of material taken out of the prism has to be carried on an average ten miles and deposited in an out of the way place. In this task 300 miles of construction track and thousands of flat cars are employed. From 700 to 800 dirt trains, each composed of 22 cars, are kept constantly moving during the hours of daylight. The amount of spoil transported during the past twelve months aggregated the enormous total of 230,000,000 tons.

Blue Jacket Plays Joke on Admiral Evans

(By G. E. [illegible]way, Parkville, Mo.)

IT is now a little more than two years since the day that I passed over the side of the battleship Maine at the navy yard in Brooklyn with an honorable discharge in one pocket and a roll of several hundred dollars in another. Great as was my joy at the prospect of the homecoming after four years' absence, I must admit that there were many reasons why I had regret in ending my enlistment. I was leaving behind a life which had been, on the whole, a very pleasant and profitable experience.

A good many of my shipmates and friends thought I would go back. But that was a question that had occupied many hours of quiet night watches at sea, and I had formed certain ideals, certain opinions and had made certain resolutions; and one of the latter was that I should seek success in a civil rather than a military life.

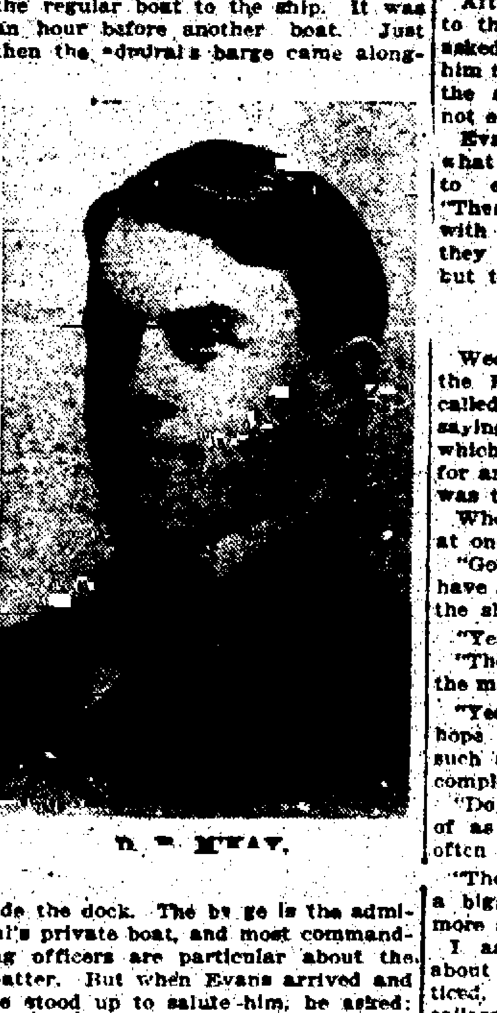

That last day, as I was waiting for my "big ticket," as an honorable discharge is called, I remember watching Admiral Evans for what I thought to be my last time. He was standing well aft on the quarter deck gazing across at the Connecticut lying opposite us. I had been under his direct command for two year, six months of which was on his flagship. If there is any man in the navy who would not do anything on earth for Evans he had better not let his shipmates know it.

The loyalty of the enlisted men to their now retired chief is, however, not the result of any sudden popularity. It is the outgrowth of over 40 years of service in which every year saw Evans in a better position to do something for the men in blue, and he never lost an opportunity to do it.

Taken by Surprise.

It was on the Pennsylvania at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, that we had a little grumbling over the rations. The complaints were without cause other than poor management by a paymaster new at sea. The news reached Admiral Evans, and that same noon the signal arrived at 11:55: "The admiral will take dinner with the crew." There was a suppressed smile on every face, as the paymaster and commissary rushed around and tried to trot out something extra for dinner. But it was too late. In less than five minutes Evans and his staff were aboard and seated at one of the crew's tables. After the dinner there was a short conference in the cabin and, incidentally, we "fed" somewhat better from that time on.

I well remember how one cold night at Rockport, Mass., several of us lost the regular boat to the ship. It was an hour before another boat. Just then the admiral's barge came alongside the dock. The barge is the admiral's private boat, and most commanding officers are particular about the matter. But when Evans arrived and we stood up to salute him, he asked: "Are any of you men from the Maine?" "Yes, sir," two of us replied. "Then jump aboard," was his command, and as we swung into our hammocks that night we agreed that the "old man" certainly was on the square.

D. W. McKAY.

Naval training makes a man pretty handy at doing most anything that comes along, so perhaps this made it easier for me to make the change from a college student to a sailor, then a reporter, then back to a college student, all in a few hours.

The night of Admiral Evans' lecture in Kansas City I put on my blues and started for Convention hall. On the cars I had to answer the usual questions, such as "Excuse me, sir, but why are sailors' trousers so large?" I told her that that usually depended a good deal on the size of the sailor. Feeling a hand on my own I turned and looked into the eyes of a sailor's mother, as I knew before she spoke, for the sight of the uniform had been almost too much for her. "I just wanted to shake hands with you. My son is coming home next month," she said.

Striking Contrast.

At the lecture I could not help but realize the contrast between the man seated there telling the story of the cruise and the man whom I had watched so often as he directed the fleet from the after bridge on the Maine. It seemed hardly possible that it had been but two years since I had last seen him.

As he praised the men and the ships for the wonderful showing they made on that which might be called the experimental part of the long cruise, he said that the performance of the ships at sea and men at target practice was the result of long days of incessant drill breaking in new men and new ships. From the knowledge of experience, however, I am at liberty to say that it was the personality of the man on the bridge that made the drill effective.

After the lecture I went up and spoke to the admiral on the platform. He asked me if I was paid off and I told him that I was. I told him that I liked the service in many ways, but was not expecting to re-enlist.

Evans laughed and said: "I know what that means," and then, turning to ex-Mayor Beardsley, he said: "These apprentice boys get paid off with a few hundred dollars and think they will get married and settle down, but they soon come back."

Interviews Evans.

Wednesday morning at 9:50 I was at the Baltimore in civilian clothes. I called up the admiral's manager and saying that I was a newspaper man, which was in a measure true, I asked for an interview with the admiral, and was told to come up to his room.

When ushered into the room I saw at once that he did not recognize me. "Good morning, sir," I said. "You have read, no doubt, of the defeat of the ship subsidy bill?"

"Yes, was very sorry to see it."

"Then you are strongly in favor of the measure?"

"Yes. It is the only way we can hope to build up a merchant marine such as we should have. That and a complete revision of our marine laws."

"Do you believe that subsidies are of as great value for defense as is often claimed?"

"They are, inasmuch as they create a bigger shipping, and that means more sailors."

I asked several minor questions about the navy and then said: "I noticed, admiral, that there were two sailors in your audience last night. Would you consider these two men as representative of the service?"

"Yes," he said, "I noticed them both, two broad shouldered, fine appearing fellows. They were the average of the best. That is because they were western boys. We get our best men from this section. The shorter man of the two went to a coxswain on his first cruise, which is a credit for any man. He says he is not going back, but they all say that."

The Secret Revealed.

By this time I thought it was time to "come through," and said: "I thank you for the compliment. But you will notice by my discharge that I have been out over two years and have neither married and settled down nor returned to the service, nor am I seriously considering either."

Both the admiral and Mrs. Evans laughed heartily over the fact that both had been deceived at the change in uniform. It was then their turn to ask questions and my privilege to give them my views on several matters about which they are asked frequently by people they meet. Mrs. Evans asked several questions which she said were asked of her by mothers who were thinking of letting their sons go into the service.

Train time was announced and the admiral asked me to go down with them, which I gladly did, and when I left him he gave me an invitation to hunt them up if I chanced to be near them again at any time.

Perhaps I have now seen him for the last time. I consider my little meeting with him one of the great pleasures of my life, for it gave me the opportunity to know him for what I had believed him to be. In military service both necessity and [illegible] establish lines which must be drawn closely, but in the words of the poet:

Then let us pray that come it may,
(As come it will for a' that,)
That sense and worth o'er a' the earth,
Shall bear the gree an' a' that;
For a' that an' a' that,
It's coming yet for a' that,
That man to man the warld o'er
Shall brothers be for a' that.

WHY NOT STOP THAT ITCH?

NEED OF AN INTERNATIONAL LANGUAGE

An Exponent of Esperanto Explains Why It Has a Field of Its Own.

By F. H. Loud,
Secretary Colorado Springs Esperanto Society.

The recent vote of the Pan-American Scientific congress in favor of the official adoption of Esperanto as the medium of international transactions, suggests certain reflections.

The objection oftenest heard by one who advocates Esperanto among intelligent Americans is that the increasing use of English will make Esperanto unnecessary. "Why seek a neutral language when our own is becoming universal? When I travel, the shopkeepers are so eager to talk English with me, that I get no chance to practice my French or German."

This argument belongs to a class that is not confined to linguistic discussion. It is quite too typically American. To deal with it properly requires the kindly but trenchant humor of our last-century essayist, who discoursed "On a Certain Condescension in Foreigners," but who in these changed days would more probably write of the American attitude of self-sufficiency. Would our neighbors like to meet us on a common ground? Why, certainly, with all my heart; right here it is, this platform where I am standing.

Now, English is a noble language for those who have known it from infancy; a priceless heritage of which the Anglo-Saxon race will never suffer itself to be despoiled. But if a person has grown up to manhood without it, what a proposition to acquire its mastery! To begin with, let us learn the first letter of the alphabet. Here is a sign, A, which for some thirty centuries or more all who have used it have pronounced "Ah," and which is pronounced "ah" by all its users of today, the English-speaking people excepted. Never mind your old acquaintance with it, my foreign friend, learn to call it "Eh!" "Well, then, if I must, I must, and I suppose when I meet it in an English word I shall always sound it so?" As to that, ahem, we have another sound, all our own, that we more commonly mark with A; you must learn that, that's flat; at that we stand pat." "Well, how shall I tell whether A is this 'eh' or that flat A?" "Not by any mark conveniently attached to the letter, that is against our principles; but we will put an i or a y after it, or an e before; none of them having any separate sound of their own, though printed as a separate letter; thus—yea, yea, in vain your nay! We will do more; we will oftenest put our silent e a little distance off, so, if the learner were not already mad he may be made so; or we will use half a dozen other combinations of signs not containing any written a at all, ei or ey, or eigh. English shall reign for aye!

From the Rio Grande to the Straits of Magellan, America is peopled by a proud race, intensely patriotic and jealous of their several national entities. Our Yankee nation has heretofore had little to do with any of them, save in one war, which few on the side of the victors now regard with satisfaction, though the losers may remember it with chagrin. But our period of nonintercourse is at an end. We now desire to court their commerce and even to play the arbiter in continental politics. Shall we accomplish either wish? Possibly, if our aims are really just, and if we can make them so understood. But national misunderstandings find no soil more favorable to their growth than mutual lack of acquaintance, conserved by ignorance of one another's language. A common forum for communication, in which neither shall have the vantage-ground of life-long possession, is an inestimable boon, and it is made possible by Esperanto.

The citizen of the United States, who really wishes that his nation shall with the good will of all America exert its proper influence in world politics, can not but second with all his heart the proposition made on January 4 of the present year by the Pan-American congress at its first session in Santiago de Chile.

Following is a translation of the resolutions:

Considering, That the Esperanto language is a human blessing, practically used by thousands of people in all the civilized nations; that it is a factor which aims toward the adoption of the ideals of human happiness and is therefore of special interest to America, the future field of action of the two great civilizations (Spanish-speaking and English-speaking) which confront each other politically and commercially, the First Pan-American Scientific congress recommends Esperanto as a neutral international language which deserves an important place in the programs of primary instruction of the American nations.

Considering, That a neutral auxiliary international language is necessary, and observing that the idiom Esperanto fulfills the requirements, that it is already sufficiently widespread throughout the world, and that official propaganda alone is lacking:

(1) The First Pan-American Scientific congress decides to express to the American governments the pleasure with which it would view the call for a congress to which would come official representatives of all civilized countries, with the purpose of solving the problem of the adoption of a neutral international auxiliary idiom, and

(2) It agrees to urge upon the government of the United States of North America that, under its grand auspices, this desire of the Scientific congress may be effected."

WE ARE HAPPY THIS EASTER MORN

Snow, rain or sunshine—the world looks beautiful to us and the same to you, because the abundant snowfall that we kicked so much about these months past means prosperity to the rancher and orchardist and to you and I—the best people and the greatest county on earth.

Whether it snows or rains, much or little, the Grand Valley orchardist cares not because he has more water than he can use, coming from far up the mountain side where snow is perpetual, an everlasting guarantee for the apricot, the peach, the pear and the apple's irrigation. While you and I wade through snows of winter the Grand Valley orchardist basks in sunshine of a temperate climate. Let us perpetuate your happiness forevermore. Come take a ride with us in the big red auto through miles of blossoms—fragrant apple blossoms—a reminder of the springtime of life and a blessed assurance of the harvest of dollars in September, the noonday of life. We have acquired control exclusively—of CHULA VISTA and RUBY MESA tracts, 600 acres of the highest grade fruit trees in the Grand Valley. Several hundred thousand dollars has been spent by the "Wallace Orchard Co." and "The Ruby Mesa Orchard Co." in cultivating, planting and bringing up to perfection these tracts that will now return five for one on the investment. Five and 10-acre tracts, 108 trees to acre, every one set by a surveyor's instrument in perfect rows, the ground between cultivated until it's as tidy as a parlor floor, each tree will increase $2.00 per annum.

Price, $400 to $750 per acre. Part cash, balance to be paid from crop. We will care for tracts at actual cost if desired. Guaranteed water rights and "everything that goes to make life worth living after all." Special half rates of fare which will be refunded in case of misrepresentation by any employe of this company. Also every third ticket free. No trouble to show you this or other lands in same location, $200 to $2,000 per acre. We buy and sell only such land as we can guarantee. Let us show you U. S. Dept. Agriculture's report on this soil; best there is.

Canada Holds Record Men's Convention

The Recent National Congress of Laymen, A Unique Event in the Religious World.

Four Thousand Men Present

UNITED STATES TO FOLLOW SUIT

THE past winter has witnessed a number of record breaking events in the religious realm—the Roman Catholic congress in Chicago, the formation of the National Federation of Churches, the getting together of the denominational brotherhoods and several unusual missionary conventions. Now Canada has set a new mark by the Canadian National Missionary congress, which closed its sessions in Toronto last Sunday, having brought together more than four thousand registered delegates from all part of the Dominion as well as a considerable detachment of honorary delegates from the United States.

There is no precedent for this meeting in religious history. It is unique in several particulars. First, it marks the gathering of the churchmen of a nation to consider in business fashion just what is their responsibility for the civilization and Christianization of the big world—including a systematic effort to meet the new moral and social conditions which have arisen in the great cities and in the northwest. In the second place, it is the most effective agency for Christian union recorded in Canada's annals. The delegates represented all branches of Protestantism: Anglican, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational and all the smaller bodies. In the third place, it brought together the most representative company of Canadians ever assembled on any occasion—farmers, businessmen, professional men and officials from Victoria to Nova Scotia.

70,000 Americans Expected

Canada has so many political, social and religious problems of her own that she might be excused for disregarding the claims of China, Korea, India, Africa and Turkey. Her northwest is being transformed like magic. Immigration is flooding it from all quarters. The springtide has already set in, and the authorities estimate that there will be no less than 70,000 homeseekers from the States to cross the border this summer.

Aroused by these tremendous changes, the churches of Canada have definitely undertaken to plant churches in every one of these new communities, and to insure every settler an opportunity to hear the gospel. At the same time, fired by the ideals of the Laymen's Missionary movement, they have set about vastly increasing their foreign mission work. In practically every city and large town throughout Canada, during the past two winters, Laymen's Missionary meetings have been held, conducted by the laymen of the churches. In these, men of all religious denominations have co-operated.

The outcome was the proposal to hold this national convention in Toronto. Such have been the magnitude of the preparations that church people on both sides of the border have been looking forward to this as the most notable religious event of the spring. Honorary delegates have attended from even the far southern states. A distinguished committee of Toronto men has been in control, but the actual executive work has been done by a Philadelphian, Mr. Herbert K. Caskey, one of the secretaries of the international Laymen's Missionary movement.

A Nation's Stirring Appeal

Toronto seems to have been impressed more by the extraordinary character of the delegates than even by the distinguished speakers. More than 4,000 men, most of whom had paid all their own expenses, and hundreds having traveled the imperial distances from the edges of the Dominion, representing all ranks of life as well as a wide geographical area, and all drawn to one point by a common altruistic impulse, afford no common spectacle. Canada has not been blind to its significance. These men constitute a formidable argument against the common theory of the engrossing and selfish nature of present-day business life. The oldest working editor in the land, Dr. Robert Murray of Halifax, wrote the convention hymn, which seemed to express the delegates' feelings, to judge by the frequency with which it was sung:

"From ocean unto ocean,
Our land shall own thee Lord."

The speakers were the leading missionary specialists on the continent. Towering above them all though, was the figure of Sir Andrew Fraser, of Calcutta, who crossed the ocean especially attend this congress, and whom a local paper called "the great pro-consul of the empire." The entire sentence, from which that phrase is taken, is so descriptive of the gathering that it is worth quoting entire:

"From the great, pro-consul, of the empire, who for nearly 40 years has occupied high administrative office under the British crown in India, down to the representative business man who presided with equal tact and sympathy over the executive business sessions and the opening devotional meeting in St. James' cathedral school house, the speakers paralleled in diversity of social position and unity of moral purpose the larger body of hearers who had met to formulate a national policy for the Christianizing of the world."

Many American Speakers.

While Canadian men predominated on the program of the sessions, which continued from Wednesday, March 31, to Sunday, April 4, in Massey hall, Toronto's largest auditorium, and a brilliant Toronto lawyer, N. W. Rowell, K. C., presided, there were large drafts made upon the missionary leaders of the United States. Among these were Robert E. Speer of New York, J. Campbell White of New York, Bishop Thoburn of the Methodist Episcopal church, Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, F. R. G. S., of New York; Louis H. Severance of Cleveland, John B. Sleman, Jr., of Washington; Joshua Levering of Baltimore, Charles A. Rowland of Athens, Ga.; J. Lovell Murray of New York, Dr. Silas McBee of New York, Consul B. F. Wilbur of Halifax, Colonel E. H. Haskell of Boston, John R. Pepper of Memphis and Harry Wade Hicks of New York.

The high character of the speakers, and their varied types, have appealed strongly to Toronto. As the Globe commented:

And what a platform that was yesterday! A preacher from the Baptist denomination, a bishop of the Anglican church, the captain of a great Canadian industry, a young Washington business man, a leader of the New York bar, two wealthy philanthropists, the provost of an Anglican university, a consul general who has represented the United States in Barbados and Singapore, a great pro-consul of the empire, with the star of India in his breast, telling of nearly 40 years of high administrative service under the crown—all presided over by "one of his majesty's counselors well learned in the law." Is there any other cause under the sun that could bring such a combination of men together to minister upon one platform?"

America to Do Missionary Work.

Now that the Canadians have made a triumphant success of this national congress, fresh attention is drawn to the plan to hold a similar meeting in St. Louis next March. The scope of the American congress will be somewhat larger than the Toronto meeting, for in addition to its missionary aspect it will officially represent all the men's organizations of American protestantism the Young Men's Christian association, the Laymen's Missionary movement, and all the denominational brotherhoods.

We cry,
We talk,
We laugh,
We walk
Our mother's pride and joy.

We fight,
We swear,
And pants
We wear,
Our father's little boy.

We dance,
We smoke,
Hold hands
And joke;
A girl and then a row.

We drink,
We eat,
Play cards,
And treat,
The fellows claim us now.

We love,

We woo,
We wed,
At leisure we repent.

We work,
We sigh,
And soon
We die;
So many a life is spent.

For Lameness in Horses

Much of the chronic lameness in horses is due to neglect. See that your horse is not allowed to go lame. Keep Sloan's Liniment on hand and apply at the first signs of stiffness. It's wonderfully penetrating—goes right to the spot—relieves the soreness — limbers up the joints and makes the muscles elastic and pliant.

Sloan's Liniment

will kill a spavin, curb or splint, reduce wind puffs and swollen joints, and is a sure and speedy remedy for fistula, sweeney, founder and thrush. Price, 50c. and $1.00.

INTERURBANS AS FEEDERS FOR TRUNK LINE RAILROADS

Map showing by the dotted lines the proposed interurban which the Union Pacific is installing north of Denver.

There was a time not many years ago when the main railroad lines were fighting the little interurbans with all their might and main. Now they are putting in interurban lines as feeders for their main lines. The New York, New Haven and Hartford was one of the first to recognize the great advantage of having interurban service in connection with the railroads and installed many such lines through their territory.

It has just been announced that the Union Pacific is about to engage upon the same enterprise and expects to spend this coming season two million and a half dollars in installing an interurban line touching a rich territory north of Denver. The line is to be known as the Denver-Greeley road, and this is only one of the many extensions planned along the Union Pacific line.

Interurbans as feeders are a success, and when properly located and economically installed they pay better dividends per mile than do the main ones but, aside from all this, they aid the main lines in securing traffic, both passenger and freight, from all the surrounding districts.

In passing an ordinance to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to aboriginal Indians the legislature of British Guiana has, like the governments of Canada, New Zealand and Natal, shown a wise consideration for the welfare of the native population.

Tent Cottage Sanatorium

105 CHEYENNE ROAD

These are houses intended for two or three people. They are fully equipped for light housekeeping, have three rooms, with electric lights, water, the best of beds, a south and a south porch, thus giving all the comforts of the house with all the advantages of a tent. The circulation of air is so controlled that it can be heated to suit the patient, or be just as cold as the air outside. They are within one block of the street car line, so the patients reach town with only one fare. The sun has free access to the cottages, both forenoon and afternoon. The treatment that is used in the sanatorium has been and is successful in killing fever, night sweats, bronchitis, and in getting rid of the bacilli in a short time, and in promoting a natural appetite with perfect assimilation of food. All those interested in tuberculosis are cordially invited to visit this sanatorium and mingle with the patients and note their improvement. Correspondence invited.

LAND IS THE SAFEST AND BEST INVESTMENT

THE WESTERN SLOPE IS A PARADISE TO THE INVESTOR OR HOMESEEKER

IF YOU ARE A HOMESEEKER

We can show you how thousands have made a home for themselves and are enjoying a comfortable income. You can do this, too.

IF YOU ARE AN INVESTOR

Who wishes to make a safe and profitable investment we can show you how to do it. We sell lands anywhere on the Western Slope.

ABOUT LAND

Land is a substantial, safe and profitable investment and you take absolutely no chances in buying it. You should, however, make a thorough and careful investigation before purchasing fruit lands. Our representative is an experienced orchard specialist and lives upon his own orchard at Fruita, Colo. He is thoroughly familiar with all fruit growing conditions, such as smudging, pruning, spraying, etc. If you seek information come to the office and talk it over with him, whether you wish to buy or not. Fruit growing is a science and is an interesting study, even to those who do not contemplate buying.

ABOUT FRUITA

Fruita is in the Grand River valley in Western Colorado and is in the very center, and having more land adjacent and tributary than any other town in the valley. (About 30,000 acres.) The land is very fertile and farming is done on a broad basis.

Altitude, 4,500 feet. Very purest of mountain water piped 26 miles.

Land values at Fruita have more than doubled in the past year and this under ordinary conditions, only. With the completion of construction on the Government High Line Canal, costing $3,000,000, a street railway throughout the Fruit section upon which work is now begun, several large private irrigation enterprises and besides all of this, the largest fruit crop the valley has ever known, it is hard to conceive to what legitimate values land will rise.

THREE SPECIALS

15 acres, one-half mile from city, in the $1,000.00 section, pure mountain water, full irrigation water right, $1?? worth of trees ordered, all for $3,600.00. You can't duplicate this for less than $4,700.00. We will sell on easy terms.

30 acres, 1 mile from city, fine 8 room house, new; full water right, 1? acres in fine winter apples, balance alfalfa and plow land, $12,500.00. Will sell on easy terms.

15 acres, 1½ mile from town, 6 inches water, 7½ acres in Rome Beauty, Jonathan, Winesap, 4-year-old; will have 1,000 boxes this year. A snap at $4,300.00. Easy payments.

Recessional hymn 115, "The Day of Resurrection."

O. E. Collins, former deputy district attorney, was in Manitou Friday conferring with the councilmen with a view of being appointed town attorney. C. W Dolph is at present the attorney for the town, but he will be compelled to resign on account of his being elected city attorney of Colorado Springs.

Rev J W Carson of the Congregational church entertained Miss Maud L. McBride's Sunday school class at the parsonage, Friday evening. This was according to the Rev. Carson's announcement made some time ago when he stated that he would give a tea party to the class in the Sunday school which would have the largest collection in a given time. This class had the largest amount. Those in attendance were Miss Maud L. McBride, Miss Thelma Richardson, Miss Lena Hitt, Miss Edna Neugebauer, Miss Mary Johnson, Miss Ella Whittinghill, Miss Grace Frizzell, Miss Elmo Berry, Miss Evelyn Belle Collier, Miss Lella LeRoy, Miss Dora Blockburger, Miss Helva Reilly, Miss ?? and Miss Davis.

Very appropriate Easter services have been arranged at the Congregational church. The Christian Endeavorers will have a sunrise meeting at 6 o'clock, and after the usual Sunday school the Grinnell, Iowa, College Glee club will give a sacred concert, beginning at 11 o'clock. In the evening the young people will have charge, and the subject of the meeting will be "What Impresses Me Most at Easter Time."

The Manitou High school baseball team and the West Siders from Colorado Springs played a game on the Manitou grounds Friday afternoon, and the local boys were victorious, 7 to 2. This was the first game the locals have won this season. They played a practice game with another Manitou team yesterday afternoon.

The Rev. Father Edmund Ley has returned to Manitou after visiting for several months with relatives in Ohio and other eastern states. He will conduct Easter services at the Catholic church this morning at 7 and at 9:30 o'clock.

The Cliff house had as visitors this week Mr and Mrs. F. H Morgan of Eureka, N. Y. They were accompanied by their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J G. Fall, who were on their wedding trip. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan have been coming to Manitou for several summers.

Mr. and Mrs. Allard Jeancon of Colorado Springs, Mrs. Rosa Parker of Denver, Mrs. O A. Davidson of Wellington, Kan.; Mrs. and Mrs. W. H. Fray and Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Francisco of Manitou were entertained at dinner Thursday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. R Francisco.

Numerous improvements are being made at the Cave of the Winds by the proprietors, Messrs. Austin and Snyder. It is expected that the season will be a record-breaker. For the last four years, the business at the cave has increased $5,000 a year.

The Rev Edwin Johnson, pastor of the Episcopal church, was in Cripple Creek during last week on a business trip.

Basil Creighton entertained a number of his boy friends at a dinner party Wednesday afternoon, in honor of his ninth birthday.

The Jonah club will meet next Thursday afternoon with Mrs. D A Tamplin on High street.

Mrs Rosa Parker has returned to Denver after a visit here at the home of Mr and Mrs. W. H. Fray.

The regular annual parish meeting for the election of wardens and vestrymen for the ensuing year will be held at St. Andrew's church tomorrow evening.

Mr and Mrs O A Shall of Clinton, Iowa, have taken rooms in one of Dr. L. H. Peck's cottages, on Ute avenue, for several months. Mr. and Mrs. Shall are on their return trip from San Diego, Cal.

BEAUTIFUL MUSIC AT FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

Special Easter music will be given by the choir of the First Baptist church at the services in the church this morning and evening. The choir is composed of Miss Viola Paulus, alto and musical director, Miss Jennie A. Pinckney, soprano; Wilfred E Auld, tenor; Joseph F. Schletter, bass; Mrs J W. Talley, organist.

"The Power of an Endless Life" is the subject of a sermon by the pastor, the Rev. J. H. Franklin, this morning at 11 o'clock.

Following is the musical program:

Society Will Joyously Celebrate

"A Good Lent" "A Happy Easter"

JUDGING by the weather, it is impossible to even imagine that we are entering, today, upon Easter week. Christmas seems such a little time away, Lent has flown by as though on wings and the most of us have made little, if any [illegible] for Easter. It falls early this year and there will be fewer spring flowers and fewer spring toilettes here and elsewhere for storms have raged east and west lately, till one had no incentive to select new clothes.

It makes little difference, really, whether we wear our winter hats on Easter or not, and with the snowy [illegible] elsewhere still to be counted upon, we are safer with our furs as well. The chances are, from our physical sensations we can hardly tell whether the services today are Christmas or Easter ones.

Provided the Easter spirit reigns in our hearts, with possible frostiness outside, there is more reason why we should prove bright and sunshiny to all whose lives touch ours and radiate [illegible].

An oft-repeated [illegible] is, "A good Lent makes a happy Easter." In the retrospect what do we find? Has Lent brought any treasures of mind and heart since the dawn of Ash Wednesday? Have selfish, self-seeking tendencies been overcome? How often have we given pleasure to others at the expense of our own ease and inclinations? These and similar questions arise in summing up 'a good Lent'—not how many church services [we] have attended, inspiring and helpful though they are.

What Easter has for us depends entirely upon what we are able to make it mean for others. In some respects Easter surpasses Christmas as a glorious time for kindly and beneficent deeds, if we but seek an opportunity. With the springing up of the verdure upon the hillsides and the bursting of the tiny buds upon shrub and tree, the wondrous story of the resurrection is accentuated; with ritual and song the thoughts of mankind are directed toward the highest aspiration of hope and joy. Yes, Easter is indeed preeminently the greatest day of hope and joy.

"Earth's saddest day and gladdest day,
Were just one day apart!"

On the saddest and the gladdest days of our lives flowers bring messages of hope; but it is at Easter when we are bidden to "be glad of heart"—that the [illegible] of floral remembrances have intrinsic value.

Extravagant Easter gifts are superfluous and for the majority of us out of the question, as there are already demands on our purses which forbid further obligations. But a little flower or two, a line of love and tender[ness], a copy of a gem in poetry or prose may gladden lonely hearts. A potted plant cherished through the winter may serve to brighten the invalid's room, a gaily tinted egg, a chick or a "bunny" please the little child. So long as with it goes the Easter thought and spirit and carries its message to the one who receives it, the token is sure to be helpful and beautiful, both to the one who sends it and the one to whom it comes.

The beloved Quaker poet, John Greenleaf Whittier, wrote this on an Easter flower gift:

"The thought of love immortal blends,
With fond remembrance of friends;
In you, O sacred flowers,
By human love made doubly sweet,
The heavenly and the earthly meet,
The heart of Christ is ours!"

Grinnell Glee Club.

The Grinnell College Glee club gave a most enjoyable concert last night in Perkins hall under the auspices of the Colorado College Y. M. C. A. Their numerous friends in the city accorded the talented young men a hearty welcome and cordial appreciation of their excellent program.

The list of patrons and patronesses included:

President and Mrs. William F. Slocum, Dean and Mrs. Edward S. Parsons, Professor and Mrs. M. C. Gile, Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Gregg, Dr. and Mrs. A. A. Blackman, Mrs. Julia Hale, Mrs. J. M. C. Sharer, Rev. and Mrs. Adna W. Moore.

Mrs. Avery to Wed.

Announcement has been made in the east of the approaching marriage of Mrs. Frank Avery to James Kidder, both now residents of New York city. Mrs. Avery was temporarily a resident of Denver and Colorado Springs a few years ago and is well known to many in Colorado. Mr. Kidder is a graduate of Harvard university and of prominence in the financial world. Both parties move in the exclusive social circles of the metropolis and their marriage, immediately after Easter, will doubtless be the occasion of elaborate ceremonies.

Easter Reception.

The Rev. Henry Rutgers Remsen, rector of Grace Episcopal church will hold a reception Easter Monday evening, in the parish house from 10 to 11 o'clock. [illegible] Remsen is particularly anxious to welcome all his parishioners upon this occasion and hopes all may make an effort to be present.

Previous to the reception, the annual meeting of the church will be held from 8 until 10 o'clock. Wardens and vestrymen will be elected and reports received from all the guilds of the parish.

Rose Luncheon.

In compliment to Mrs. James P. Shearer, who leaves the last of this week for a several months' trip abroad, Mrs. George B. Tripp gave a rose luncheon of lovely appointments yesterday noon at her home, 824 Cache la Poudre street, the crimson rambler variety being used in profusion.

In Honor of a Bride.

In honor of the bride of her son, Mr. A. Harry Fisher, Mrs. Jay More, 1 Cheyenne boulevard, gave a charming informal reception last Wednesday evening. Pink roses, wedding bells and white satin slippers decorated the parlors. In the dining room [illegible] were violets and pink roses mingled with asparagus plumosa. The favors were imitation suit cases filled with bonbons.

An elaborate course supper was served, Mrs. Peifer acting as toast mistress. The toasts were drunk in ginger champagne, and the sentiments were: "To the Bride"—Mrs. Jenkins; "To the Ladies"—Mrs. Kirkwood; "To the Old Maids"—Miss Baker; "Auld Acquaintance"—Mrs. Dudley.

Those participating were Mrs. More, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. David Elliot, Mrs. L. A. Todd, Mrs. William B. Jenkins, Mrs. E. A. Peifer, Mrs. Charles H. Dudley, Mrs. John G. Kittleman, Mrs. C. E. Madden, Mrs. Thomas C. Chapman, Mrs. Frank W. Hemenway, Miss Lizzie Baker.

Engagement Announced.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Edwin Monroe, 512 North Weber street, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Frances Cinq-Mars to Mr. Henry Gill Morrell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Morrell, 1619 North Nevada avenue. The wedding will take place some time in June.

Both young people graduated from the Colorado Springs High School, and Mr. Morrell was a student in Colorado College for two years. They are identified with the younger social circles of the city and congratulations have been showered upon them. Lately, Mr. Morrell has been the manager of the Victor Hardware company and he will take his bride to the Cripple Creek district.

Kensington Club.

An enjoyable meeting of the Kensington club was held last Thursday afternoon at 703 North Wahsatch avenue with Mrs. Bert Wade. The hostess of this week's meeting to be held on Thursday, is Mrs. T. Ernest Nowels, 128 North Weber street.

Luncheon at Ivywild.

Miss Gertrude Jenkins was the guest of honor last Saturday afternoon at a luncheon given by Mrs. E. A. Peifer of Ivywild. The guests were mostly members of the Cornucopia club. A large "bridal" bonnet, made of violets and pink flowers and paper, was suspended from the electrolier. Violets and pink carnations formed the floral garniture on the table. The name cards bore Easter greetings and appropriate responses to toasts were made by Mrs. C. N. Dudley and Mrs. Jay More. Mrs. Gillis presided at the coffee urn.

Candy Pull.

A number of college students who remained in town over the Easter vacation entertained some of their friends at a jolly "candy pull" last Wednesday evening at the Phi Gamma Delta house, 817 North Cascade avenue. About 20 [illegible] report a fine time.

For Miss Cinq-Mars.

Miss Ethel Whitaker gave a delightful party last Thursday afternoon at which the guest of honor was Miss Frances Cinq-Mars, one of the June brides-elect. In the dining room the table was arranged with a large white paper swing containing the articles intended for Miss Cinq-Mars. Surrounding it were sprays of white marguerites and ferns.

The place cards were ornamented with pen and ink sketches of Gibson girls and marguerites, and the favors were bunches of marguerites.

Participating were Mrs. Ralph C. Bradfield, Mrs. Smith Parnes, Mrs. Charles LeRoy Robertson, Miss Jewel Dannevik, Miss Marjorie McKenzie, Miss Ina Bowen, Miss Blanche Whitaker and Misses Lela and Alice Ball.

Fourth Annual Ball.

The City of Sunshine auxiliary, No. 42, to the Colorado Springs Typographical union, No. 82, will give its fourth grand annual ball, tomorrow, Easter Monday evening, in the ball room at the Antlers hotel. There will be music for the dancing by Fink's orchestra, floral decorations and refreshments so all attending may be assured of a delightful evening.

The committee having charge of arrangements for the ball includes: Mrs. J. F. Jones, Mrs. C. M. Carter, Mrs. H. T. Riley, Mrs. S. P. Newby, Mrs. J. J. Paugh and Mrs. B. C. Sweeney.

For Mrs. Fisher.

Thursday evening, Mrs. Jay More of Cheyenne boulevard, Ivywild, entertained informally to meet her daughter-in-law, Mrs. A. Harry Fisher, the guests being some of Mrs. Fisher's associates while she attended Colorado College.

Among those present were Mrs. Richard McKinnie Aitken, Miss Gertrude Jenkins, Miss Marjorie Dudley, Miss Clara Cheeley, Miss Rule Aitken, Miss Vesta Tucker, Miss Lucy Shepard, Miss Evelyn Lennox, Miss Ethel Baer, Misses Louise and Janet Kampf.

A fine course supper was served late in the evening. The place cards were hand decorated in cupids and upon the reverse side were clever questions relating to the rose which taxed the ingenuity of the guests to correctly solve. In compliment to the college girls, the family cat, a large black one, was ornamented with a huge orange bow, thus carrying out the colors of their Alma Mater.

Thimble Party.

The guests invited were Miss Marjorie Dudley, Miss Margaret Cameron, Miss Hannah Reid, Miss Mabel White, Miss Marjorie Meservey, Miss Alice Perkins.

Jolly Dozen Club.

Mrs. Grace entertained the Jolly Dozen club at her home, 162 Hayes avenue last Tuesday afternoon. High five was played and Mrs. Reid and Mrs. Alexander succeeded in winning the prizes. Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess.

Embroidery Club.

The Embroidery club met Tuesday afternoon in the home of Mrs. Fred Kroenfer, 6 East Mill street. Light refreshments were served late in the afternoon after pleasant hours spent in doing fancy work and conversation.

Easter Ball.

The Ladies' auxiliary, Order of Railway Conductors, will give a ball on Easter Monday evening, April 12, in Majestic hall. There will be music by Fink's orchestra and light refreshments served. The proceeds from the ball will be used in defraying the expenses of the delegates appointed to attend the national convention to be held in Boston, Mass., beginning May 11. The committee of arrangements includes Mrs. T. J. Hurley, Mrs. Frank Lyon, Mrs. J. S. Dessenbaugh, Mrs. Edward Malone and Mrs. W. Morris.

Informal Party.

Miss Eleanor Thomas, 1203 North Nevada avenue, gave a delightful informal party Tuesday evening, the diversions being music, games and refreshments. Among the guests were Miss Ramona Brady, Misses Alpha and Flora Crowley, Miss Pace, Miss Cleo, Miss [illegible], Miss Thomas, Misses Sayre, Thomas, Beary, Crowe, Copeland and Graham.

Home Wedding.

The wedding of Miss Ethel Tapp and Mr. John Herndon Rust of Kearney, Mo., was quietly celebrated last Sunday afternoon in the home of the bride's relatives, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Benton, 509 North Wahsatch avenue, at 2:30 o'clock, the Rev. E. Evans Carrington officiating. On Tuesday, Mr. and Mrs. Rust left for Kearney, Mo., their future home, where the groom is extensively engaged in farming.

A [illegible] Wedding.

Miss Elsie M. Martin and Mr. Perry A. Mead, both of Denver, were united in marriage last Thursday evening at 7 o'clock by the Rev. James H. Franklin, pastor of the First Baptist church, in his home, 218 East Cache la Poudre street.

Married in Denver.

Miss Evelyn Neff and Mr. Frank L. Plass, both of Denver, were married March 29 at the residence of the bride's mother in Denver. Miss Neff was a teacher in the Roswell school until about three years ago, when she removed to Denver and became a stenographer. Mr. Plass is connected with the Rocky Mountain News.

"Golden Glows."

The "Golden Glows" gave a charming little party last Wednesday afternoon in compliment to Miss Gertrude Jenkins, at the home of Mrs. E. A. Peifer on Ramona avenue, Ivywild. There was an enjoyable program that included: Piano duet, Miss Hoop and Miss LeKlaum; violin solo, Miss Audi May; piano duet, Misses Kirdwood and Hemenway; recitations by Miss Kittleman and Miss Conway; song, Miss Beatrice Peifer.

THE BLOOM OF THE EASTER CROSS

O Christ! whose cross began to bloom
With peaceful lilies long ago,
Each year above thy empty tomb
More thick the Easter garlands glow;
O'er all the wounds of that sad strife
Bright wreathes the new immortal life.

The hands that once the cross upraised
All power in heaven and earth doth fill;
Of men desired, of angels praised,
Why sits he silent, waiting still?
Alas! in many a heart of [illegible]
The Christ is crucified again.

Low lies the world he died to save,
And feels not yet her Easter morn;
Still holds the victory of the grave
O'er all his brethren younger-born.
His soul yet travails by their side,
Its long desire unsatisfied.

Sad symbol of the deathly strain—
In resurrection-light revealed—
The sign of hope that conquers pain,
Of joys that sharpest sorrows yield—
Hail, then the first that bearest flowers!
The burden, not the grace, is ours.

And yet the cross is dropping balm:
May we not come so near, at last,
That all the grief shall shine with calm,
And beauty hide the ashen past?
Oh, that our stone were rolled away!
Oh, that our cross could bloom today!

An Englishman has invented a bicycle for the blind. In reality it is a multi-cycle, carrying 12 riders, led by a seeing person, who does the steering.

WOMAN'S CLUB NEWS

NEAR a shady wall a rose once grew,
Budded and blossomed in God's free light,
Watered and fed by morning dew,
Shedding its sweetness day and night.

As it grew and blossomed fair and tall,
Slowly rising to loftier height,
It came to a crevice in the wall
Through which there shone a beam of light.

Onward it crept with added strength,
With never a thought of fear or pride;
It followed the light through the crevice's length
And unfolded itself on the other side.

The light, the dew, the broadening view
Were found the same as they were before,
And it lost itself in beauties new,
Breathing its fragrance more and more.

Shall claim of death cause us to grieve,
And make our courage faint or fail?
Nay; let us faith and hope receive,
The rose still grows beyond the wall.

Scattering fragrance far and wide,
Just as it did in days of yore,
Just as it did on the other side,
Just as it will forever more.

THE COMING POET.

When the coming poet gets here he will sing such songs of gladness
That the hearts of those who hear him will be lightened by the strain,
And the souls of those who sorrow will rise up from care and sadness,
Finding comfort in his singing such as parched fields find in rain.

He will sing—this coming poet—of the dignity of labor,
He will sing the lofty mission and the brotherhood of man,
And his song will make men better, and each man will love his neighbor,
And in life's wide field of action each will do the best he can.

He will sing to help his brothers, songs of homely truth and beauty;
He will take our hearts and make them instruments whereon to play,
And his words will rouse and nerve us to a higher sense of duty,
And they'll stir our hearts like winds that blow the mists of doubt away.

When he comes I know full well he will not sing of pain or sorrow
He'll not brood o'er wrong and error till his thoughts are gray with gloom;
But he'll sing of faith and gladness and of better things tomorrow,
Till each song will seem like sunshine that makes bright a sick man's room.

Will we know of his arrival and give welcome to the poet
When he comes? I often wonder. I am more inclined to think
He will come in such a manner that but few of us will know it
Till we see the good news given by the means of printer's ink.

Very likely we shall wake up to the knowledge some fine morning,
That the dreamed-of, coming poet has been with us all along—
Lives next door to us, it may be, and we had no hint of warning
That the song to which we've listened was that very poet's song!

—BEN E. REXFORD.

[illegible] OF I.

Some day, dear, one of us—we twain—
Will watch alone in tears,
And call the other one in vain
In voice of hopeless fears,
As in death's silence one of us shall lie
Which will it be, dear, thou or I?

Were one of us by death bereft
So of love's thought and speech,
What other word of hope is left
To utter each to each?
So one shall watch, and one in death shall lie!
Which shall it be, dear, thou or I?

Beside life's pathway as we go
One will grow faint and fail,
And seek another way to know
Where death shall not prevail;
And one will wait alone as days go by
For yet a longer space,
God's pitying grace;
Which shall it be, dear, thou or I?

I may be first to understand
The life so far from thine;
Mine may be woe to fold thy hand
Grown still and cold—in mine;
As sign of death across thy breast to lie
God chastens others so.
Thank him, we do not know
Which it will be, dear, thou or I.

Along the path of a useful life
Will heartsease ever bloom;
The busy mind has no time to think
Of sorrow or care or gloom;
And anxious thoughts may be swept away
As we busily wield a broom.

BY "FOOTLIGHTS."

Glau and his overweight chorus from the "Aeroplane" company have returned to New York in what may be described as greatly reduced circumstances. Not as to finances, let it be said, nor yet in numbers, glory be, but in avoirdupois—that is to say, in flesh. The entire galaxy has lost out in this respect, much to its advantage.

It seems the people out west will support slim ballerinos, and no other, and our famous "balloon chorus" carried, so to speak, no weight with them. They treated that prize collection of fat New York beauties with an unprecedented coldness. Consequently, Glau faced the problem of reducing the entire front and rear rows at once, or shipping them back—"excess" baggage. It was a terrific job, as all who saw the "Aeroplane" before it left this tolerant town will admit, but our ingenious townsman tackled it and succeeded—broke all records, in fact. And thereby hangs a tale worthy of any fat lady's attention.

Glau didn't rehearse his flock into shape, nor starve them into line, nor yet worry them, verbally, into shadows. He paid salaries regularly and let them eat and drink as they listed. He simply hung up a new rule in the dressing-rooms to the effect that every lady less than five foot seven who weighed in excess of 130 pounds must take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime (or about where her bedtime ought to be), of the following: One-half ounce Marmola, ½ ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic, and 3½ ounces Peppermint Water.

They did it and in a month averaged a loss of a pound a day apiece. "That's a dandy receipt," says Glau. "Simple, pleasant, harmless and a worker from the word 'go.' Wish I could get a railroad fare reducer half as good."

AFTER SUFFERING TEN YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MARLTON, N.J.—I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me new life. I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. I was in despair, and did not care whether I lived or died, when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so I began to take it, and am well again and relieved of all my suffering."—Mrs. GEORGE JORDY, Box 40, Marlton, N.J.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

THE [illegible]AKING OF [illegible]

After the blight of winter,
Its frost and its biting cold,
To greet the [illegible]
And watch the lily unfold;
To hear in the budding branches
The twitter of nesting birds,
And feel in the heart long saddened,
A gladness too deep for words.

This is the Easter message,
This is the seal divine,
As if God said, I will give thee
Each year a wonderful sign,
That earth in her resurrection
May say to the hearts of men:
"After the grave's dark shadows,
Ye, too, shall blossom again."

Christ is risen! O listen!
The sound of the Easter bells,
Christ is risen! the music
Rises, and deepens, and swells,
Till earth breaks out into music,
And the air is astir with wings,
As if the angels were bending
To hear what the glad world sings.

WO[illegible] OF SOCI[illegible] [illegible] AMU[illegible]

ARE you keepin' Lent?" inquired the House Detective of the St. Reckless.

"I am," said the Hotel Clerk. "I've given up barefoot dancing. Until after Easter Sunday you'll not see me doing a single step of the barefoot waltz or polka, as the case may be, no matter how great the temptation."

"Have you gone plum dippy?" asked the House Detective.

"I have not," said the Hotel Clerk. "Why don't you read the papers? Don't you know barefoot dancing is the latest Lenten diversion of our best society. So far it's been confined to the ladies, but any minute I'm prepared to hear that Ediglia Lyer, Jr., had been leading a barefoot cotillon with one-night corn plasters for the favors, the ladies wearing interlocking boots and the gentlemen thumbstalls on their toes.

"It was a great idea all right. Society demanded a new diversion. Grand opera was over. The divorce season wouldn't open up good for a couple of months yet, and anyhow so great was the desire for change that merely changing wives and husbands wouldn't satisfy, as it had frequently done in the past for months or even years at a time. A momentary flurry of interest, yet when all's said and done, only a flurry, had been created by young Mr. Biddle of the reigning house of Philadelphia, a great clubman among the pugilists, and a great pugilist among the clubmen, who, desiring that most priceless [illegible] of the [illegible] the manly [illegible] are of self-pretense, a cauliflower ear, induced Mr. Philadelphia Jack O'Brien, also of his native city, as the name would imply, to don the gloves with him, thereby securing in a few hurried but painful rounds not only a cauliflower ear, but a peach of an eye and a boiled dinner nose, with tomato sauce; the whole constituting what might be called a four-course face.

"It was at this juncture that the Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson took off her shoes and stockings and came to the rescue. In England, where she comes from, I suppose the name is pronounced Constantly Stewed-Rxyn, or something of that sort, but in this country we sounded it like it was spelled and let it go at that, which was wrong, of course, but the best we could do with our own inferior knowledge of the mother tongue. The Lady Constance, who is a noted sportswoman and very daring, as she proved, was over here on a visit to some of our leading dynasties, and in the name of charity, which, as the poet says, covers a multitude of sins, but hadn't uncovered any up to that time, she consented to oblige at a semi-private feet recital, tickets $15 each, and no rain checks.

"Just the mere announcement created a sensation the like of which had not been known since the memorable year when Mr. Harry Lehr robbed a zoo to strengthen the intellectual pitch of a Newport dinner function. And, you can take it from me, there was a notable assemblage of notables present on the auspicious day when the Lady Constance came forth dressed in the costume worn by the ancient Greeks during an ancient Greek hot spell, and tripped the light fantastic toe, some say tripped it and some say stubbed it; but, anyhow, she was there with the light fantastic toes, ten in number. The performance started after several outsiders, including newspaper photographers and a chiropodist, had been ejected.

"I read the accounts of it very carefully myself. Wearing draperies of a diaphanous but economical nature, this gifted young noblewoman, who had gone to such ends, such ends, indeed, for sweet charity's sake, appeared before simple chaste draperies of long, dark green, and with her locks bound flat to the brow with a fillet, the ancient Greek substitute for the modern headache bandage, she gave a program which ranged from Ostenmoor's Spring Song to something from Bach, who, in my opinion, was all right as long as he stuck to beer, but fell down hard when he closed up the brewery and began to write music. Opinions of the performance seemed to vary. There was apparently a disposition in some quarters to intimate that if they had not been the property of a person of rank the limbs in question might have belonged to a hired girl, without subjecting her to the importunities of theatrical managers looking for members of a beauty chorus, while some surprise was caused by the feet [illegible] ing to fit on at right angles, just as in the case of a common person. One carping critic, belonging to the metropolitan school of carp, went so far as to say that the ankles which he saw twinkling hither and yon, and occasionally twinkling up against each other with a quaint knocking sound, were either Ionic or Doric in design or [illegible] Doric [illegible] he wouldn't care to state which until he'd consulted some standard work on the earlier forms of Greek architecture.

"But these were merely the hypercritical remarks of interlopers. In the charmed inner circles of society Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson's dancing was generally accepted as charming in the extreme, and besides after paying the necessary expenses a sum amounting to nearly $3.50 was realized for charitable purposes. So they put it down as a success, and now barefoot dancing has a vogue that hasn't been equaled since Father Kneipp announced his discovery of curing cold in the head by walking in the wet grass of a morning with nothing on the feet except generous nature's chilblains.

"I'm glad the Lady Constance happened along when she did, dressed like a fireman coming down the brass pole, with his boots and things over his arm, to answer a midnight alarm, and that she gave the jaded soul of society such an inspiring fillip. Only I'm afraid it won't last. It's distressing to think of a bright spirit of society, leaning wearily up against something all I ant with nothing on his hands but cuffs, and nothing [illegible] on his mind except the part in his hair, yawning from shear ennui until a full face view of him is like looking down a megaphone.

"I'm a loyal American, Larry, but I'll admit they manage things better abroad. Over there, [illegible] the upper classes have been cultivating ennui for 1,000 years or so, an aristocrat can be idle for months at a time and feel [illegible] enough at the end of it to continue right along the same line indefinitely. But with us, even in our most exclusive society, the national restlessness which a desperate effort to the contrary has not yet succeeded in entirely eradicating drives our society people on and on, until after awhile they fall down on their foolish maps.

"It's that same craving for [illegible] that makes our society women old before their time. I don't know exactly what their time is, but I know they are old before it. I've seen 'em. Think how earnestly some of them espoused the cause of woman's suffrage this past winter. Why, if the wardens of the state penitentiary would only be considerate enough to have Paquin devise a becoming costume for lady convicts, done in the empire mode, and provide bridge parties of golden handcuffs with turquoises set in the links, I'll bet you that there's plenty of our society suffragettes would stand willing to martyr themselves for the cause and go to jail in defense of a great principle, the same as their courageous English sisters have done.

"And before Lady Constance came along with her talented feet some had even been driven into settlement work among the poor, although that really ceased to be the correct thing as far back as three seasons. But I wouldn't like to speak disparagingly of settlement work. It was a treat for both sides, giving the rich a chance to see the poor and the poor a chance to see the rich, and nobody the worse off for it. Picture yourself, Larry, living in a restricted residential slum district. It is a neighborhood typical of your class. There are four saloons on the corners just below your own cozy slum, all flourishing and doing well; but the delicatessen store in the middle of the block closed up for want of business last week. The street below resounds with the cheerful clamor of ambulance gongs, cops beating the heads of the peasantry, and babies falling off the fire escapes, mingled with the prattle of the children as they chase the blithesome duck to the lighted side door. So much family lines is being aired [illegible] the [illegible] that a stranger [illegible] think there was an unhappy married [illegible] of the Gould family living on every floor. You have just licked your wife and lighted your pipe for a peaceful evening when the door opens and, with the subdued jingle of a [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] ing against a pearl dog collar, in comes a patrician representative of one of the olde Knickerbocker families, forsaking all her social obligations and even forgetting to collect the [illegible] in her [illegible] to carry [illegible] and cheer to [illegible]. Would you not feel honored and proud to have her [illegible] ting here [illegible] in your most private family affairs without even being asked? Wouldn't you feel, for a time, that a great spirit of uplift had come into your life?"

"I'd feel for an ax," said the House Detective, "and do a little uplifting myself. Can't society people find no better way to [illegible] the [illegible] than dancin' barefooted and [illegible] in other people's [illegible]?"

"The trouble with society people is that they can amuse everybody but themselves," said the Hotel Clerk.

From the Circle Magazine.

The term "coffer" is rightly applied only to the very earliest [illegible] of these boxes, when they had but a single panel and [illegible] bound with iron or made of great strength. Such articles as these are called in old books and many [illegible] "trussing chests" or "standards." "Hutch" was another term applied to these standing chests, and they were so important that you cannot find any of those valuable old records like "The Paston Letters" or Howell's letters, nor the records of our own early settlers, without finding many references to the chest, beginning with that small kind known as a "Bible box" and running through all the varieties which could be brought or made here. Although the chest grew into the chest of drawers, the simple box-like form remained in use till about 1810, for I still find them recorded in inventories and wills till about that date.

Italian chests or "cassoni" were always gems of art. On them not only the artist artisan, like the carver and inlayer, displayed his best handiwork, but the artist himself painted on them loves and cupidones, masks and musical instruments, flowers and festoons, letting his fancy have full play when it was applied to a marriage chest or one of those elegant little coffers in which some noble lady kept her store of "[illegible]ate pearles," her girdles and rings, her chains filled with jewels of brilliant color and great worth. Such chests had ponderous locks [illegible] to [illegible] extent amid [illegible]

HAIR REMOVERS ARE DANGEROUS

Dr. Wertenbaker Says:—"Don't Use Poisonous Depilatories."

In treating superfluous hair it is of vital importance that the agent to be employed should be absolutely non-poisonous, antiseptic and germicidal, because if it is not so with frequent use it will produce eczema or blood poisoning. The trouble with the majority of ladies is that they don't do a little thinking for themselves. When an assertion is made by some unreliable concern they take it as gospel truth. They never consider the reliability, neither do they question or ask for any substantiating proof that a preparation is non-poisonous. They seem to think that the bare word of the manufacturer is sufficient. To the contrary, ladies should be most particular in choosing a hair remover and learn first what reputable authorities know about it.

Dr. Wertenbaker, the prominent physician, says:—"For several years I said to my patients, 'Don't use poisonous depilatories, because they are bound to do harm.' I have found De Miracle to be absolutely non-poisonous, antiseptic and germicidal, therefore, on account of these qualities, it is distinctly beneficial to the skin and under no circumstances can it produce eczema or blood poisoning. I have used the preparation in my practice for a number of years and find that the principle of its chemical and physiological action is correct. I consider it the only satisfactory method for the removal of superfluous hair.'"

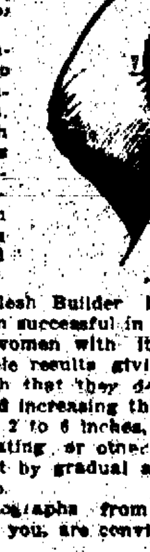

Better take a doctor's advice. Don't be deceived with the fake free treatments which are advertised so extensively in the newspapers. Remember, after you have used worthless concoctions, it will be harder to remove the hair; therefore, isn't it better to investigate all hair removers first, before you try any of them?

We will send you absolutely free, in plain sealed envelope, a 54-page booklet containing full information concerning this remarkable treatment, as well as testimony of prominent physicians, surgeons, dermatologists, medical journals and the principal magazines. You should read this booklet before you try anything. It treats the subject exhaustively. Write to the DE MIRACLE CHEMICAL COMPANY, Desk 458, 1,905 Park Avenue, New York, simply saying you want this booklet, and it will be mailed, sealed, at once.

DEAVES MANIKINS,
Unique Marionette Entertainment, At the Majestic All This Week.

EASTER week at the theaters offers various kinds of entertainment. Charles B. Hanford will present two Shakespearean plays at the Opera House, Friday matinee and night, and the Majestic offers first-class vaudeville to its patrons. Hanford is an annual visitor to this city and his productions are always awaited with more or less interest. He offers studied performances of the great Shakespearean plays, and while he is by no means a great actor, his productions always have considerable value, both from a student's point of view and from an amusement standard. Friday, Mr. Hanford will present "The Winter's Tale," which is a beautiful study of jealousy. "The Taming of the Shrew," one of the master's best comedies, will be given in the afternoon, and in this play Hanford is said to be especially good. He will also present "The Old Guard" as a curtain-raiser for "The Taming of the Shrew."

The Denver engagement of the Ben Greet players and the Russian Symphony orchestra in Shakespeare's repertoire, with musical arrangements, was a decided success. This organization reached Denver during Holy Week, so the success of the week is all the greater. The productions given were all exceptionally beautiful and the addition of the music to the dramatic text has made the Ben Greet and the Russian Symphony performances rarely exquisite.

Olive Fremstad, the great soprano, makes her first Denver appearance tomorrow evening at the Auditorium where she will be heard in concert. This famous singer is now recognized as the legitimate successor of Nordica, Lehmann and Tertina in Wagnerian and lyric dramatic roles. Her success two years ago in Strauss' "Salome" and also her wonderful interpretation of Kundry in Wagner's "Parsifal" have raised her to the highest pinnacle in grand opera.

Her program tomorrow evening ranges from Schubert's beautiful songs to the more dramatic Wagnerian selections. Mary Angell, a pianist who is making a decided success in the east, accompanies Fremstad for this concert.

DAN TRACY,
Manager of Fairyland.

Mischa Elman, acclaimed the most wonderful musical genius of this age by the most authentic critics of London, Paris, Berlin, New York and other art centers, will make his second appearance in Denver this week, playing at the Auditorium Friday evening under the direction of Robert Slack. This is Elman's second appearance inside of a month in Denver. So successful was his first concert in that city that Mr. Slack secured him for another recital this week.

Elman has been ranked as the equal of the boy Mozart, and never, it is said, since the days of this composer has such an extraordinary prodigy been heard. Elman seriously objects to the word "prodigy," as he wishes to be judged as the master player he is.

H. E. Krehbiel of the New York Tribune says of Elman's playing: "His performance of the Tschaikowsky Concerto was listened to with the attention it deserved, and it won the genuine enthusiasm of the large audience. His playing discloses not only a mastery of technic, but the instinct and accomplishments of a musician, as distinguished from a mere virtuoso. Elman's tone is large and it is pure, with an element approaching nobility. His notes were produced with penetrating clarity and beauty and with a precise faith to the pitch that was comforting to hear."

The Denver engagement of Elman is a rare opportunity to hear a great artist. Elman is now on his way to Australia and will not be heard again in this country for a long time.

What Press Agents Say

CHARLES B. HANFORD COMING.

The well-known actor, Mr. Charles B. Hanford, supported by an excellent company of players, will be the next attraction at the Opera House. On next Friday they will give two performances. In the afternoon they will present "The Taming of the Shrew" and "The Old Guard." In the evening "The Winter's Tale."

Many seasons of success have not blinded Charles B. Hanford to the necessity of keeping his productions up to the highest possible standard. The enormous personal following he has won has not tempted him to relapse into the old-fashioned "star system," which meant a dependence on the vogue of a single player of recognized greatness and an utter subordination of cast and stage equipment. Among the greatest lessons that Mr. Hanford learned during his association as a young actor with Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett was that a competent player need fear no rivalry in his own company; that the greatness of a performance was enhanced by efficiency in the portrayal of the surrounding characters.

When such players as Booth, Barrett and Modjeska appeared in co-operation, instead of rivalry, the deathknell of petty jealousy was sounded, so far as the higher drama was concerned. Mr. Hanford has again surrounded himself with the most capable players available in the Shakespearean field. His leading woman, Miss Marie Drofnah, has a clientele that will hail with deep satisfaction the recovery of health which enables her to reappear in such roles as Katherine in "Taming of the Shrew," Beatrice in "Much Ado About Nothing," Portia in "Merchant of Venice" and Hermione in "The Winter's Tale."

This last-named play is Mr. Hanford's selection for special spectacular production this season. In addition to the role of Leontes, he will play the part of that jocund scamp, Autolycus, a character in which the greatest classic players have delighted to display their versatility. Among the members of the supporting company may be mentioned Mr. John M. Kline, whose work has during previous engagements attracted so much favorable attention. "The Winter's Tale" is a play not often seen, yet one of the most fascinating of all that Shakespeare has given the world.

"THE GIRL QUESTION."

Pretty girls and catchy songs, dances which are marvels of grace and action, a cast of sterling players, and above all, a play with a plot of intense human interest, are found in "The Girl Question," the entrancing musical play which comes to the Opera House for one performance next week.

This play is along the lines and is in fact a successor to "The Time, the Place and the Girl," the musical comedy which has jammed every theater in which it has played since its run of 452 performances in Chicago. The 50 prettiest chorus girls who have ever been seen in one show are found in "The Girl Question," as are also the famous "$1,000 Beauty Broilers," the latter being the 10 little girls who dance with an abandon of emotion and enthusiasm and an amount of ginger which has never been equaled.

The plot of "The Girl Question" reveals everyday life, which is of real human interest, though broken up in its development at moments to allow for the introduction of songs and dances. The production was staged by that past master in the exploitation of dramatic scenes, beautiful stage pictures and graceful dances, Harry Hanlon. The cast includes Paul Nicholson, Henrietta Tedro, Marguerite De Von, Nina Collins, Carl George, Russell Lennon and others, while the songs include "Good-By Pal," "I Hate to Work on Monday," "O, Gee, Be Sweet to Me, Kid," "Waltz Me Round Till I'm Dreamy," "When Eyes Like Yours Look Into Eyes Like Mine," "The Old Buck and Wing" and "Do Something."

"THE BURGOMASTER" RETURNS.

"The Burgomaster," one of the best musical attractions traveling, will be seen at the Opera House next Saturday afternoon and evening.

The Montreal, Quebec, Gazette has the following to say of "The Burgomaster:"

"Packed to capacity, with standing room in demand, the Academy of Music last evening presented an aspect in keeping with the best traditions of former seasons. Established popularity in previous visits, "The Burgomaster," with accessories up to date, at once renewed its hold, and the strange adventures of the merry old Dutchman were witnessed with as much laughter as ever.

"Harry Hermsen is again in the role of the Burgomaster, a host of merriment in himself, and as the Summer Boy, Phemie Lockhart looks as attractive as of yore in the garb of her opposite sex.

"There is an abundance of catchy airs, which are prolific of encores, the weird song of the Indian chief in act one provoking a storm of applause. The chorus that greeted the burgomaster on awakening from his sleep of 300 years added no little to the success of the entertainment, their dancing being good, their costumes triumph of taste, and their faces in most cases bewitchingly fair, so that though the results of indulgence in whisky were shown to lead in Peter Stuyvesant's case to employment in a dime museum and awkward importunities from an amorous lady theosophist, the tippling old gentleman's fate had features to be envied."

MAJESTIC BILL THIS WEEK NOVEL AND LENGTHY

Following a bill that drew exceptional audiences, considering the season and the weather, comes another this week to the pretty playhouse which will prove as novel and as satisfactory. Theaters throughout the western country have been compelled to curtail their performances for lack of patronage during the past week, but the attractiveness of the play at the local home of refined vaudeville made this unnecessary, in fact, impossible, in this city.

The appreciation of the people of Colorado Springs of the endeavors of the management to provide the most comfortable surroundings, a playhouse that is absolutely clean and well ventilated at all times, and a retinue of attaches who are courteous to everybody, is continuously demonstrated by their patronage. The splendid attractions, too, which are always secured by Manager De Witt C. Webber are in themselves sufficient to merit the indorsement of those who desire the best there is in refined and wholesome vaudeville entertainment.

This week Deaves Manikins will amuse everybody. These little actors in miniature are the children of the evolution which has brought the old-time marionettes of our boyhood and girlhood days up to that state of perfection where they are human in everything but composition. Their act is a burlesque "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which will be understood by everybody who has seen that dear old drama. Besides their inventor, Harry Deaves, five persons are required to manipulate them and cause them to act lifelike, and the amount of stage accessories required for this act alone would stagger the ordinary road company. This novel entertainment will be the source of much pleasure to the children—and likewise to the grown-ups.

The Carson Brothers, called the "Apollos of Vaudeville," are marvels of strength and grace, and both are as well and symmetrically developed as the famous Sandow. Their feats of strength would be unbelievable to those who do not actually witness them.

Watson and Little, two refined and pleasing performers, furnish the sketch which always fits so well into a bill designed to furnish something pleasing to every taste. "A Matrimonial Bargain" is full of clean fun, and furnishes both performers a chance to sing in the masterly way in which they are capable.

Rosa Roma, the "Gypsy Violinist," has made a lasting impression wherever she has appeared in this country. She is not only a finished soloist, but possesses a personality which is charming, and one which will appeal to the lovers of cleverness and refinement who make up the Majestic audiences.

Carrie McMannus is always popular. This young lady is entitled to all the applause she receives at each performance, for she never fails to give to her auditors the best there is in her. There is no soprano singer in the country who possesses a sweeter voice, nor one capable of wider range, and her musical future is bright, indeed.

Those who see the Majestiscope pictures each week declare them to be far ahead of those usually exhibited in even the best vaudeville theaters. Great care is used in selecting both the subjects and the films. The result is they are always entertaining.

Another excellent program will be rendered by the Majestic orchestra this week, under the direction of Charles Schuemann.

The Week's Offerings

Friday, "The Taming of the Shrew."

Charles B. Hanford, the Shakespearean actor, supported by a well-balanced company, will be seen at the Opera House Friday for two performances, "The Taming of the Shrew" will be given in the afternoon. Hanford is said to be especially fine in this old comedy. It will be preceded by a one-act play, "The Old Guard," in which Hanford is at his best.

Friday, "The Winter's Tale."

In the evening Hanford will present for the first time in this city in several years Shakespeare's "The Winter's Tale." This drama was last seen here when Louis James, Katherine Kidder and Charles B. Hanford produced it at the Opera House about seven years ago. Miss Drofnah is Hanford's leading woman this year.

Saturday, "The Burgomaster."

One of the best musical attractions on the road, "The Burgomaster," will be seen at the Opera House next Saturday afternoon and evening. The present tour of this attraction will in all probability make its farewell appearance, especially in America, as arrangements are now under way to send this musical masterpiece to Europe.

Majestic, All Week.

Deaves Manikins, whole company of marionette players, carrying their own theater and requiring five people to operate; Carson Brothers, marvels of strength and grace; Watson and Little, in "A Matrimonial Bargain"; Rosa Roma, Gipsy violin virtuoso; Carrie McMannus, "The Girl With the Sweet Voice"; the popular Majestiscope; Majestic concert orchestra.

FAIRYLAND THEATER CHANGES MANAGEMENT

Mr. Dan Tracy, who bought half interest in this theater from Henry Lubelski the first of March, has now acquired Mr. Lubelski's entire interest in the business.

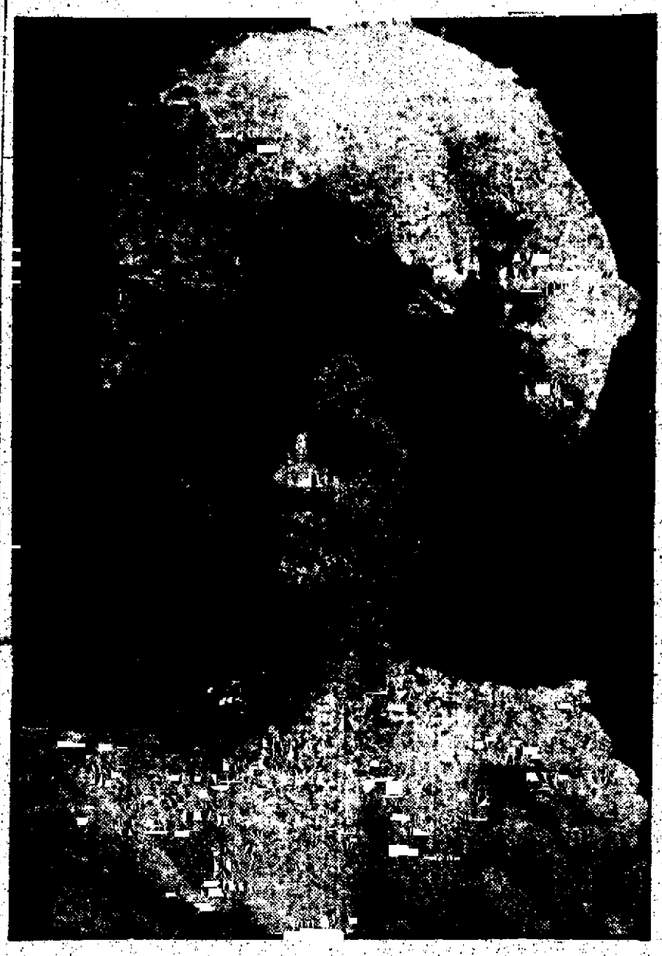

Professor B. F. Parks, who has been a very able assistant to the management ever since the opening of this house, has become financially interested and will assist Mr. Tracy in the management. Now the new management hopes for a continuance of the patronage of all the old patrons, and cordially extends an invitation to all ladies and gentlemen who have not been patrons of the house to come and let us prove that we are running a clean, orderly house, where ladies and gentlemen will not feel that they are out of place nor have a hesitancy in bringing or sending their children. We will make an effort to secure the services of the best performers that can be secured from the western circuit, and Professor Parks will make a specialty of selecting the best and latest motion pictures from the Kleine Optical Film company. Our singer will sing the latest illustrated songs. We will change our program twice a week—Monday and Thursdays.

Another thing the manage t wishes to call the attention of the public to is the fact that we have received a shipment of disinfectant known as Florodora. This solution is cleansing and purifying, and will kill all germs. It has been approved and adopted by the board of health of New York city, and is used by all the big houses in the east. We spray our house every day.

This week we have engaged Brown and Ross, in their sketch, entitled "Watch the Cigarette," a team of wonderful merits, and we are sure it will please everyone.

THE CARSON BROTHERS,

MARIE GRANDPRE,
Of the "Burgomaster" Company, to Appear at the Opera House Next Saturday Afternoon and Evening.

Alisa Margurette Davis, the dainty singing and dancing soubrette, another act that comes to us very highly recommended by the western circuit.

We will also show an illusion entitled "Rolla," by Prof. Parks, and have a guessing contest as to how it is done, and one-half mile of moving pictures.

Children admitted to any performance, 5 cents. General admission 10 cents.

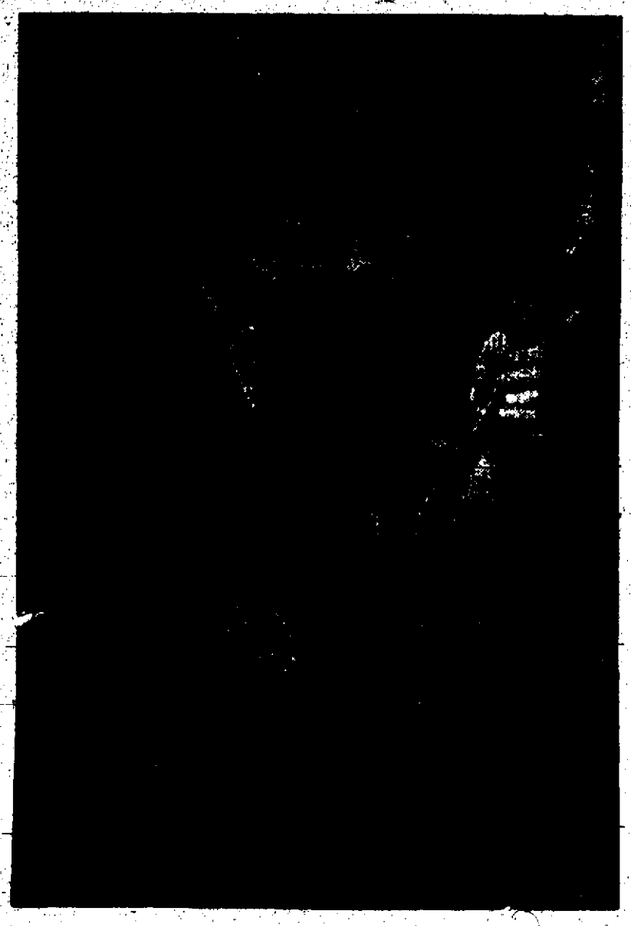

Arrangements are now being made for a summer stock at the Opera House, and if present plans go through Colorado Springs will see the best stock company in the history of the local theater. This company, according to present plans, is to be brought from the east, and all will be first-class players. Only the latest royalty plays are to be produced, with two different bills each week.

"The Round Up," Edmund Day's successful play of the Arizona desert, in which Maclyn Arbuckle is scoring this season, will be sent south and to the Pacific coast next fall, but Arbuckle will not be seen with the company, as he is to star in "The Circus Man" next year.

George Barnum, who plays Dr. Bernstein in Charles Klein's "The Third Degree," was an umpire in the Western Baseball association in 1887, and in the National league in 1891. Mr. Barnum is now compiling a baseball record covering 35 years. It will be published shortly.

B. F. PARKS,
Assistant Manager of Fairyland.

MISCHA ELMAN,
The Phenomenal Boy Violinist Who Has Stirred the Music World by His Playing. Elman Makes His Second Denver Appearance Friday Evening at the Auditorium.

"THE WINTER'S TALE."
Charles B. Hanford's Spectacular Production of Shakespeare's Play, Which Comes to the Opera House Friday Evening. Hanford Will Play "The Taming of the Shrew" and "The Old Guard," Friday Afternoon.

WESTERN SLOPE REALTY COMPANY ESTABLISHES OFFICES IN THIS CITY

The Western Slope Realty company, comprising men who live and own orchards on the western slope, have located permanently in this city and have opened offices at 17 East Pikes Peak avenue. They will handle fruit lands on the western slope exclusively and have listed choice lands on almost any part of the rich fruit belt of the western slope and the Grand valley. All who are interested are invited to call and talk over the fruit-growing proposition.

It is estimated that 6,000 carloads of fruit will be shipped out of the Grand valley this year and on this basis requisition for cars has been sent to the railway by John F. Moore, secretary of the Fruit Growers association. He has notified them that from the three points, Palisades, Clifton and Grand Junction, there will be approximately 3,500 carloads of apples, 1,800 carloads of peaches, 500 of pears and 200 of cantaloupes.

The total value will exceed $3,000,000, and such an output from so limited a territory will surpass any other record in the United States. It is three times greater than the high-water mark which was made in 1906.

Not only has the late spring this year held back the buds so that danger of frost has been lessened, if not entirely obviated, but preparations have been made for smudging in case it should be required, and there is not a bearing orchard in the valley which is not equipped with some orchard heating device.

More than 1,200 English tradesmen are this year entitled to use the royal arms over their shop-fronts.

HEMP INDUSTRY IS RAPIDLY DECLINING

HAS FALLEN AWAY GREATLY IN PAST 50 YEARS.

By Frederic J. Haskin.

It is probable that American history does not present another such remarkable decline of an industry as that shown by the statistics of hemp growing. Fifty years ago this season the high-water mark of American hemp production was reached. The crop that year yielded 149,000,000 pounds of the fiber, more than half of which was produced in the state of Kentucky. Today the annual production of the whole country amounts to less than one-sixth as much as was grown in Kentucky in 1859. One county of the Bluegrass state produced as much hemp than as the whole United States produces now.

The latest figures show that there are about 1,000 American farms on which hemp is grown today, with an average of 16.6 acres to the farm. The average yield per acre was 732 pounds. Kentucky has 88 per cent of the acreage and about the same proportion of the total crop is raised there. Sixty-nine out of every 100 pounds of hemp grown in the United States is grown in five counties of the bluegrass region of the state. Illinois, Nebraska and California grow nearly all of the remaining 12 per cent of the American hemp crop.

Reason for Failing.

The reason for the decline of hemp production is closely connected with the invention of the steamboat. When Rumsey and Fulton were inventing their steamboats they were signing the death warrant of the hemp industry. As sail power was swept from the seas by steam power, the demand for canvas and rope fell off. Then came cheaper hemp from other quarters of the globe, and the decline of profits to a point below that which could be made cultivating other crops which grow in bluegrass soil.

Farmers Losing Millions.

It is the opinion of the department of agriculture that the American farmer is losing millions of dollars by the refusal of American twine manufacturers to use American hemp fiber in the making of binder twine. A score of years ago, when the consumption of binder twine was 50,000 tons a year, as compared with 135,000 tons today, the department estimated that if one-half of it had been made from American-grown hemp the saving to the farmer would have amounted to $1,750,000. But the twine-makers would have nothing to do with the proposal of the department that American hemp fiber should be used. They declared it made a "soft twine," which was not as satisfactory as sisal or Manila twine. To this the department answered with a letter from a large harvester manufacturer, showing that American hemp twine worked as satisfactorily as any other in the operation of the harvesters. The efforts of the department never availed to restore American hemp twine to favor.

While the growing of hemp in the United States has become a negligible quantity, the importations of fiber have increased at a rapid rate. We are annually spending some fifteen million dollars for the hundred thousand tons of sisal grass that are imported, $11,000,000 for the 80,000 tons of Manila hemp, besides other smaller items, and the importations are expected to increase more than ever before. The Manila hemp produced in the Philippines annually is equal in value to the purchase price of the islands.

Industry in Philippines.

The hemp industry in the Philippines had its birth some two and a half centuries ago. A monk of the Franciscan order, Padre Pedro Espelleta, impressed with the poverty of the people, set to work to train them in the growing of hemp and the separation of the fiber from the stalk. It is related that he experienced great difficulty in overcoming the natural laziness of the people, but that with certain rude instruments he was able to fashion, they were able to do the work quite satisfactorily. Those instruments have been in use without important change from that day to this.

The history of the hemp industry in the United States is an interesting one. Virginia tried to establish hemp growing in colonial times. At first it was enacted by the house of burgesses that as a preparation for war, the county courts should distribute to each tithable colonist a quart of flaxseed and a quart of hemp seed, in return for which there should be given to the tithing master after the next harvest, one pound of flaxseed and one pound of dressed hemp, or two pounds of either, under oath that the tithable colonist had grown it. Later bounties were offered for the production of dressed hemp and flax. Colonel William Byrd of Westover was one of the hemp growers who received bounties from the state. But hemp growing never got to be a passion with Virginians.

Lexington Center of District.

Kentucky early got into the hemp-raising business, and from the beginning Lexington has been the center of the hemp-growing district. Within 25 miles of that town there has been more hemp grown than in all the rest of North America together. It was at one time almost as much of a legal tender to Kentuckians as gold and silver are to the people of today. Even the editor of the Kentucky Gazette advertised that he would be glad to have subscriptions paid in hackled hemp. Kentuckians and others saw great visions of prosperity for Lexington by reason of its situation amid the hemp fields. Hezekiah Niles declared in his Register that Lexington promised then to be the great inland city of the western world.

Henry Clay never reached greater heights of oratory than when he was talking of Kentucky hemp and Kentucky women. In one speech in Congress he told how the venerable Colonel Shelby—hero of Kings mountain—had his family clad by the labor of its own hands, how the spinning wheel and the loom were in motion at daybreak, and how the matron delighted to show her friends the stores of goods laid aside for her daughters when they were married. "Let the painted dolls of our cities sneer at these things," he exclaimed, "the daughters of Isaac Shelby, whether at the spinning wheel or in the drawing room, possess a [illegible] dignity that would, of its own force, put to flight a whole squadron of these [illegible]."

There was always a great desire on the part of the Kentucky hemp growers to excel the rest of the world in the excellence of their hemp. They were just as anxious that it should be stronger than Russian hemp as they were that their horses should outrun the Virginia thoroughbreds. At one time they had a trial on the Connecticut river between Kentucky water-rotted hemp and the best Russian hemp. Each was made into rope two and a half inches in circumference and the test applied. The Russian rope parted at 4,113 pounds strain. The Kentucky product broke at 3,209 pounds. No horse race won ever brought more joy to the hearts of Kentuckians than that that brought them. In all such tests the Kentucky hemp proved superior to the Russian product. At last it was decided to rig one side of the ship Constellation with rope from Kentucky hemp and the other side with Russian hemp-rope. After a two years' cruise the captain declared that if there was any preference it was in favor of the Russian. But the Kentucky rope was made of dew-rotted hemp, and the Navy department [illegible] to be preferable to dew-rotted, and buys that kind to this day. Had the Constellation used the Kentucky water-rotted, every son of the Bluegrass state believes the American eagle would have vanquished the Russian bear in that contest.

Cut Worm Worst Enemy.

The cut worm is one of the worst enemies of hemp. Colonel Jack Chinn not long ago tried sowing salt to keep them out of his fields. The cut worms disappeared, and most people concluded that the salt had proved efficacious. But subsequent similar experiments led to the conclusion that Colonel Chinn's cut worms would have disappeared anyway. It is estimated that a crop of hemp requires 20 inches of rain in growing, or nearly a half million gallons per acre.

Hemp harvest comes a hundred days after sowing. In Kentucky it is usually cut about frost time. In later years this has been done by machinery. After it has been cured and stacked or shocked, and the autumnal equinoctial [illegible] set in, it is spread out and allowed to rot. When the fiber has thus [illegible] breaking process begins. This is getting the fiber out of the [illegible] time out of mind the rate for breaking has been a cent a pound. The [illegible] pounds in rags did as a good average, though [illegible] as high as a hundred pounds [illegible] and 800 pounds a day. [illegible] counts more than [illegible] strength, but those who possess that quality will not impart it to others, but [illegible] children, in many [illegible]. The scarcity of labor has led to a great demand for machinery for the breaking of hemp, but as yet little progress has been made, and the little [illegible] hand break is still the favorite implement. There are [illegible] patents on hemp-breaking machines [illegible] in the patent office, but the [illegible] which [illegible] the bill [illegible] been invented.

The hemp seed business has been brought down to a [illegible] of hemp, and in order to get pure seed much pains [illegible] change for a bushel in the fall [illegible] the fruit [illegible] seed hemp is carefully cut to prevent a shattering of the seed. Then [illegible] four are stacked up together, and [illegible] they [illegible] dry [illegible] so high [illegible] profitably [illegible]

The duties of shipping, [illegible] jute, of [illegible] and of Manila hemp, have all had a hand in the decadence of American hemp growing. But [illegible]

A DOG OF FLANDERS

A CLASSIC IN A PAGE

BY OUIDA (LOUISE DE LA RAMEE) 1840~1908

Copyright, 1908, by J. W. [illegible]. All Rights Reserved.

In this story Ouida displayed most fully her gift of insight into the simple but compelling emotions and hopes of the poor and simple. The boy and the dog of Flanders became characters that a large world of readers loved as soon as they appeared; and though time has not left the story in its original commanding position, it has remained a vital, living thing, and the probability is that it will remain always one of the prized stories of the English language.

PATRASCHE was only a dog of Flanders—yellow of hide, large of head and limb, powerful by inheritance of muscle from a race that had toiled cruelly in Flanders through many a century—slaves of slaves, dogs of the people, that strained their noble sinews in harness and broke their noble hearts on the flints of the merciless streets.

When the drunken Brabantois, who owned him, had at last driven and beaten and starved Patrasche till the dog fell on the dusty road and lay with wide-open, foaming mouth, the Brabantois gave him a final kick and then harnessed himself to the cart, to draw it till he could steal a dog for the work.

Patrasche, flung into a ditch, was found by a little, bent, lame, miserably clad old man, who had a little, rosy, fair-haired, dark-eyed child by the hand. The old man was Jehan Daas, who had been a good soldier in the times when war trampled the country as the oxen trample furrows. When wounds and age had crippled him, and peace had made soldiers unnecessary, he was thrown aside and permitted to starve, bit by bit, on the small coins that such a remnant as he could earn.

The child was his orphaned grandson, Nello; and old Jehan Daas proved again the daily miracle that the strength which is not sufficient to support one, by love is made sufficient for two.

Jehan Daas and Nello did not share the Flemish hard-heartedness toward dogs. The old soldier surveyed the creature with pitying eyes. Then he kneeled down and lifted the big head. He saw that the dog was alive, and took him home with much effort. Patrasche lay there too weak to move for many days. In all that time he waited for the blow, the kick and the curse that had been his constant portion. But he felt only the soothing caress of the old man's hand and heard only the soft murmurs of the child's voice.

So when the great dog roused himself again to life his great, deep eyes had a gentle grace in them, and his faithful dog's heart awoke to a mighty love.

Little Nello threw his arms around the tawny neck and hung a chain of marguerites over the great head and clapped his hands as they decided to call him Patrasche.

The pity that had made them bear Patrasche to their mud hut and share their crusts with him was more than repaid now. Patrasche became breadwinner. As soon as he could move again the dog walked to the little cart that the old man used to draw each morning to Antwerp with milk intrusted to him by the neighbors. He backed in between the shafts, and when they hesitated about harnessing him he tried to draw it with his teeth.

Jehan Daas thanked heaven for the dog that winter, for he grew too feeble to pull the load himself. Patrasche, accustomed in his puppyhood to frightful burdens, thought nothing of a little cart with a few milk cans.

So little Nello and Patrasche grew up together, almost equal in years, until Nello was big enough to take his grandfather's place at the side of the cart.

He was a beautiful child, with dark, grave eyes, and fair hair that clustered to his throat. He attended faithfully to his work, and Jehan Daas was able to sit at home and rest his old body. Nello and Patrasche toiled cheerfully over the hot leagues in summer when the dust lay thick on the unlovely, plowed, treeless country around Antwerp; and they toiled cheerfully over those same frozen leagues in winter, when all the wild North Sea weather blew its angriest gusts over the unprotected roads.

Neither Jehan Daas nor Nello ever had quite enough to eat. Therefore Patrasche did not have enough, either, though they shared their food with him carefully. But Patrasche was happy despite a little hunger. Being only a foolish, loyal dog, he preferred love to crusts, and he was content so long as he could trot or lie by Nello's side.

Only one thing caused Patrasche any uneasiness, and that was that Nello would disappear in the great old churches of Antwerp whenever he had a moment. Patrasche, left outside of the dark, arched portals to these melancholy, majestic piles of stone, would wait wearily and anxiously. Once or twice he essayed to follow his beloved and inseparable companion, and clattered up the steps with his milk cart, but they drove him back so sternly that ever after he waited patiently outside.

When Nello came out after these visits he looked very queer, and would gaze dreamily at the evening skies beyond the lines of the canals, subdued and almost sad.

He visited the great cathedral again and again, and whenever he went there he stayed so long that lonely Patrasche would yawn and sigh to himself till he could bear it no longer, and found relief for his doggy grief in a plaintive howl. Then, when the lad emerged at last, he would throw his arms around the beast's neck and kiss him on his broad, tawny forehead and murmur always the same words: "If I could only see them, Patrasche—if I could only see them!"

One day when the custodian was out of the way Patrasche got in for a moment after Nello. The boy was kneeling before the altar picture of the Assumption. He arose and drew the dog gently toward the door; but as he passed the two great veiled pictures by Rubens that hang on either side of the choir, he said to Patrasche: "It is terrible not to see them, Patrasche, just because one is poor and cannot pay! He never meant that the poor should not see them when he painted them, I am sure. And they keep them shrouded here in the dark—the beautiful things! If I could only see them I would be content to die."

But he could not see them, and faithful old Patrasche, who looked at him so wistfully, could not help him, for poor folk to whom a sou is life or death, could not hope to get the silver piece that the church exacted as the price for looking on the glories of the Elevation of the Cross and the Descent of the Cross.

Into the soul of Nello, the hungered, ragged grandson of a crippled old pauper, there had flown a splendid spark of divine fire. The little peasant boy, with the dog drawing milk from door to door, walked in a wonderful dream whose god was Rubens. The winter cold might pinch the little blue feet, thrust stockingless into wooden shoes, and the winter wind might flutter the poor, thin garments, but Nello walked in a rapture, and all he saw was the glorious face of the Mary of the Assumption, and he felt the waves of her golden hair, and he dreamed of the eternal light shining on her brow.

He drew everything, anything, with chalk on the stones. His gaze darkened and his face radiated at the evening glow of sunset or the rose-swept dawns. Often a strange, nameless pain and joy mingled so hotly in his breast that he cried on Patrasche's wrinkled head.

He did not know it, but the same leaven was working in him that in other times had brought forth Rubens and Jordaens and the Van Dycks and the rest of the wondrous tribe. He whispered to Patrasche of his vague, formless longings and dreams; and Patrasche looked at him fondly and attentively, as if he understood. Perhaps he did. Who knows?

There was only one other to whom Nello could speak of his fantasies. This was little Alois, the pretty, rosy baby daughter of Baas Cogez, the miller, who was the most prosperous man in the village.

Little Alois was indeed the richest child for miles around. She had neither brother nor sister. At Kermesse she had as many gilded nuts and Agni Dei in sugar as her hands could hold. When she went up for her first communion her flaxen curls were covered with a cap of richest Mechlin lace.

Notwithstanding her wealth, Nello and Alois and Patrasche were together most of the time, playing in the fields, gathering flowers or sitting by the broad wood fire of the mill house. The miller was a good man, though somewhat stern, and he liked the fair-haired, gentle boy.

But when Alois was 12 years old and Nello was 15, the miller began to think. And one day he came upon his pretty daughter sitting amidst the hay with the tawny head of Patrasche on her lap, while Nello, sitting opposite, drew their pictures on a clean, smooth slab of pine wood with a piece of charcoal.

The miller looked at the portrait with tears in his eyes. It was wonderfully like her, and he loved her dearly. Then he spoke roughly, chiding her for idling there, and snatched the wood from Nello's hands.

"Dost do much of such folly?" asked he.

Nello hung his head. "I draw everything I see," murmured he.

The miller was silent. Then he stretched forth his hand with a franc in it. "It is folly," said he, "and evil waste of time. Nevertheless, it is like Alois and will please the mother. Take this silver bit for it and leave it to me."

Nello lifted his head and put his hands behind his back. "Keep your money and the picture both, Baas Cogez," said he, simply. "You have been often good to me."

He called Patrasche and walked away across the fields.

"I could have seen them with that franc," he murmured to Patrasche, "but I could not sell her picture—not even for them."

Baas Cogez went home troubled in mind. "The lad must not be with Alois so much," said he to his wife.

"He is a good lad and loyal," said she, looking at the piece of pine wood where it was throned above the chimney with her prized treasures, a cuckoo clock and a Calvary in wax. "Alois will have enough for both, and one can not be better than happy."

"You are a woman, and therefore a fool," said the miller, striking his pipe on the table. "The lad is naught but a beggar, and with these painter's fancies, worse than a beggar. Have a care they are not together in the future, or I will send the child to the surer keeping of the nuns."

So the old red mill ceased to be a landmark to Nello, and he did not see the flaxen head waiting for him, nor did Patrasche find a crust or a bone held out by little, kind hands. The dog looked humbly and longingly at the closed door. The boy went by without pausing, with a hot pain in his heart. The girl sat within and tears dropped on her knitting.

Baas Cogez hardened his heart and said to himself: "It is best so. Who knows what mischief might not come of it in the future?" So he would not have the old, hospitable door unbarred for Nello except on formal occasions, which had neither warmth nor mirth in them to the two young creatures who had been accustomed so long to a daily, gleeful, happy interchange of thoughts and speech.

But the little panel of wood remained in the place of honor above the chimney piece; and sometimes it seemed a little hard to Nello that while his gift was accepted, he was denied.

He did not complain. It was his habit to be quiet. Old Jehan Daas said ever to him: "We are poor. We must take what God sends—the ill with the good. The poor can not choose."

But in his heart Nello dreamed of becoming great. And one day there was announced in Antwerp the offer of a prize of 200 francs a year to any lad of talent, scholar or peasant, under 18, who could produce the best unaided drawing in chalk or pencil. Three of the foremost artists of the town of Rubens were to be the judges.

Nello fashioned an easel of rough lumber and mounted on it a great, rough sheet of gray paper. He had gone without bread more than once to buy the poor material; and he hungered many times more before he possessed the chalk and crayon, and even then he could buy only the rudest implements.

In a dreamy little outhouse he set up the easel and there, day after day, all that spring and summer and autumn he worked slowly, minutely, pondering long before he dared lay a line on paper, laboring with all his soul.

The picture was only that of an old man sitting on a fallen tree. He had seen old Michael, the woodcutter, sitting so many a time. Nello had never a soul to tell him of, perspective, of anatomy, of light and shade. Yet there grew, under his untrained, inspired hands, all the weary, wornout old age, all the sad patience, all the poetry of the lonely old figure, sitting there and meditating on the dead tree with the darkness of a descending night closing in.

It was rude. It was full of faults. But it was true and it was in a manner beautiful.

Patrasche lay by his side hour after hour while he worked. His eyes looked at the picture and at its creator with such intelligence that Nello came to believe that the dog knew what he was doing. He spoke to Patrasche as if he were a human being, told him all his hopes and dreams, and said: "Rubens would give me the prize, I think, if he knew."

The drawings were to go in on the first day of December, and the decision was to be given on the 24th, so that the winner might rejoice at the Christmas season.

In the twilight of a bitter winter day Nello placed the great picture on his little milk cart and took it to Antwerp with a beating heart, now quick with hope, now faint with fear. It seemed to him so vain and daring that he, a lad with bare feet, who hardly knew his letters, should expect great artists, real artists, to look at his work. Yet when he saw the cathedral he took heart. The form of Rubens seemed to loom magnificently before him, and the lips with their kindly smile seemed to murmur: "Nay! Have courage! It was not by a weak heart and by faint fears that I wrote my name for all time upon Antwerp!"

That night the sharp winter became sharper. Snow began to fall, and fell for many days. Paths and roads were lost. It became bitter work to carry the milk to Antwerp, especially for Patrasche, whose bones were growing old. Nello tried to spare him and drag the cart himself, but the dog would not permit it. He hung stubbornly to his harness, and Nello could assist him only by pushing behind secretly.

One afternoon as they came back from Antwerp Nello found a pretty little ornamental figure, a tambourine player, all scarlet and gold, lying in the road. He tried to find its owner, but failed. Then he thought that it would please Alois.

It was quite night when he passed the mill house, but he thought it could be no harm if he gave her his little treasure trove. He climbed a shed with a sloping roof beneath her window and tapped lightly on the pane. Alois opened and looked out.

Nello put the figure into her hands. "Here is a pretty thing I found in the road," he said. "Take it, Alois, and God bless thee, dear." He slipped from the shed roof before she had time to thank him and ran off through the darkness.

That night there was a fire at the mill and much corn was destroyed, though the buildings were saved unharmed. All the village was in terror. The miller was insured, and lost nothing, but he was furious, and declared that the fire was due to no accident. He thrust Nello aside angrily when he saw him among those who had been roused out and had come to help.

"Thou were seen loitering here after dark," cried he in his wrath, "and I believe that thou dost know more of the fire than any one."

Nello heard him in stupefied silence. He could not believe that any one could say such a thing except in jest, yet he could not comprehend how any one could make a jest at such a time.

The whisper ran through the village that Nello had been seen in the mill yard after dark and that he bore Baas Cogez a grudge for forbidding his intercourse with Alois. [illegible] charged him seriously [illegible] the fire; yet the villagers, servile to their richest man and eager to hold his favor, gave grave looks and cold words to old Jehan Daas's grandson.

"Thou art cruel to the lad," said the miller's wife. "Sure he is an innocent lad and a faithful one, and would never dream of such wickedness, however sore his heart might be."

But because Baas Cogez knew that he was committing a great injustice he held to it grimly and stubbornly.

It was a hard trial for the lad to have the whole of his little world turn from him, especially hard in that snow-bound, famine-stricken winter when the only light and warmth that could be found was by the village hearths, and when all drew nearer to each other, all to all, except to Nello and Patrasche.

Then there arrived a man with a mule, who offered to take the milk into Antwerp. The burden that Patrasche had to draw became very light. He stopped every morning at the old familiar doors and looked at them patiently. No doubt it cost many a heart a little pang to let the dog draw on his cart empty, but everybody desired to please Baas Cogez.

The weather became wilder and colder with the approach of Christmas. Death entered the little hut and took away Jehan Daas. He had been only a poor, paralyzed old man, who could not raise a hand in their help and defense, but he had loved them. A great solitude and desolation closed around Nello and Patrasche. They refused to be comforted as they followed the rough deal box to the white churchyard on the white winter day.

The owner of the hut, a hard, miserly man, demanded the rent, which was over-due. He would grant no mercy and claimed every stick and stone, every poor pot and pan in the place.

"Let us go, Patrasche," said Nello, "Dear, dear old Patrasche. We will not wait to be kicked out."

It was the twenty-fourth day of December when they departed and took the accustomed road to Antwerp.

IT BECAME BITTER WORK TO CARRY THE MILK TO ANTWERP—ESPECIALLY FOR PATRASCHE, WHOSE BONES WERE GROWING OLD

Patrasche hung his head, for he missed his harness and knew that something was wrong. At one of the cottages Nello stopped timidly and asked: "Would you give Patrasche a crust? He is old and has had nothing since yesterday morning."

The woman shut the door hastily, murmuring some vague words about wheat and rye being very dear. The boy and the dog went on wearily. They asked no more.

By slow and painful ways they reached Antwerp. "If I had anything that I could sell to get him bread!" thought Nello, but he had nothing except the thin linen and serge that covered him scantily and his pair of wooden shoes.

Patrasche strove to understand. He nestled his nose in the lad's hand as if to comfort him.

The winner of the drawing prize was to be proclaimed at noon. On the steps of the building and in the entrance hall was a crowd of youths some of his age, some older, all with parents or relatives or friends. His heart was sick with fear as he went among them, holding Patrasche close to him. The great city bells clashed out the hour. The doors of the inner hall opened. The eager panting throng rushed in.

When his vision cleared he saw the drawing raised on high.

It was not his own!

A slow, sonorous voice was proclaiming aloud that the victory had been won by Stephen Kiesslinger, son of a wharfinger of the burg of Antwerp.

When Nello recovered consciousness he was lying on the stones outside and Patrasche was licking his face and moaning over him. In the distance a throng of the youths of Antwerp were shouting around their successful comrade and escorting him with acclamations to his home on the quay.

The boy staggered to his feet and drew the dog into his arms. "It is all over, dear Patrasche, all over!" he said.

Weak with despair and with hunger, he began the weary way back to the village. Patrasche limped slowly by his side. The snow was falling fast, a hurricane blew from the black north. It was bitter as death on those unsheltered, monotonous plains.

Darkness closed in before the village was in sight. Suddenly Patrasche stopped, whined and scratched in the snow. He brought out a small case of brown leather.

The boy looked at it under a little Calvary by the roadside that had a lamp burning under the cross. He read the name of Baas Cogez on the wallet and in it he found notes for two thousand francs.

The discovery roused him a little from the deadly stupor that had overcome all his senses during the bitter march. He made straight for the mill house and knocked. The miller's wife opened it. She was weeping. Alois stood clinging to her.

"Is it thee, poor lad?" she said kindly through her tears. "Get thee gone ere the Baas sees thee. We are in sore trouble tonight. He is out seeking for a great sum of money that he lost in the snow, and he will never find it with this storm to cover it up. And God knows, it will come nigh to ruin us."

Nello put the wallet into her hands and called Patrasche within the house. "Patrasche found it tonight," said he quickly. "Tell Baas Cogez so. I think that he will not deny the dog food and shelter in his old age. Keep Patrasche from pursuing me, and I pray of you to be good to him."

Before either the woman or the dog knew what he meant, he had stooped and kissed Patrasche, then closed the door quickly and disappeared in the gloom of the storm.

The dog leaped furiously at the door, wailing in anguish. The woman and the girl, bewildered by the suddenness of the happening, did not dare to let him out till it was too late. Then they tried to comfort him. They brought meat and sweet cakes, the best they had, to the starving beast. He would not touch it, but lay, pressed close to the barred door and moaning at intervals.

It was 6 o'clock when the miller entered through the rear, jaded and broken, with his cheek pallid and his voice quivering. "It is gone," said he. "We have looked with lanterns. It is gone—the little maid's portion and all!"

His wife put the money into his hands and told him how it had come to her. The man sank trembling into a seat and covered his face, shamed and almost afraid. "I deserved not to have good at the lad's hands," said he at last.

Little Alois crept up to him and rested her curly head against his cheek. "May not Nello come here again as he used to, father?" she asked.

The miller took her into his arms. "He shall bide here on Christmas Day and any other day he will," replied he. "God helping me, I will make amends to the boy—I will make amends."

It was Christmas Eve and the mill-house was warm with oak logs and squares of turf, the atmosphere was rich with cream and honey and good meats, the rafters were hung with evergreen and the chimney was draped with holly. The family tried to coax the dog to the fire and set before him a bit of their own feast. But he would not leave the door.

"He wants the lad!" said Baas Cogez. "Good dog! Good dog! I will go over to the lad the first thing at day dawn."

They did not know that Nello inhabited the hut no longer. So, while Patrasche lay with his nose to the crack of the door, Alois tossed back her yellow hair and sang, thinking of her playmate who would be with her so soon. Baas Cogez watched her with moist eyes and spoke of how he would befriend the boy. The mother sat with contented, happy face at her spinning wheel.

When the supper smoked on the table and the voices were loudest and gladdest, Patrasche glided out when the door was opened by a visitor. With his weak, starved old limbs he hurried into the bitter, black night.

It took the old dog a long while to discover any scent in that deep snow. He lost it over and over again, even after he found it; but he sought and trailed and searched all alone through the storm and the pain of hunger and cold, a poor, desolate old dog seeking the one he loved.

It was nearly midnight when Patrasche at last tracked Nello's footsteps over the heart of the village and into the road toward Antwerp. Once when on the highway he could follow faster, but when he reached the town so many diverse paths crossed each other that the old dog had a hard task. But he held grimly to his task, though the jagged ice of the armored streets cut his frozen paws and the hunger within him began to gnaw like a rat's tooth. At last the gaunt, shivering brute traced the steps he loved to the great cathedral.

By some negligence one of the doors had been left unclosed after the great midnight mass. The dog crept softly, slowly in, snuffed along the stone floor, found the trail at last and followed it through the immensity of the black vaulted place to the gates of the chancel.

There he found Nello, stretched on the stones.

As soon as his nose touched the boy's face he started up and clasped the dog close with a low cry. "Let us lie down and die together," said he. "Men have no need of us and we are all alone."

Patrasche crept closer still and laid his head on the boy's breast. His brown, sad eyes were so moist with affection that they seemed full of tears.

They lay together in the dark and the cold. The blasts that blew over the Flemish dikes from the northern seas were like waves of ice which froze every living thing they touched. The interior of the dark cathedral was even more bitterly chilled than the plain outside. Under the Rubens they lay together, quite still, and passed into a dreaming slumber by the numbing narcotic of the cold.

Suddenly a great white radiance streamed through the vast aisles. The snow had ceased to fall and at the moment the moon broke through the clouds. Clear as the light of a splendid day shone the light of the winter night.

It touched the boy and woke him. He opened his eyes and saw, over his head, the two great pictures from which the veil had been withdrawn on Christmas Eve—the Elevation and the Descent of the Cross.

Full on them fell the pure, unearthly light. He arose and stretched his arms toward them. An ecstasy of passion shone on his white face.

"I have seen them! I have seen them!" cried he. "O God, it is enough!"

His limbs failed under him. He sank to his knees, but still he gazed upward at the majesty displayed for him. As if in pity [illegible] light lingered on the divine [illegible], illuminating them as they might be illuminated by light from the great throne itself. Then suddenly it passed away. Once more a great darkness covered the face of Christ.

The arms of the boy drew close again to the body of the dog. "We shall see His face there," he murmured, "and He will not part us, I think."

On Christmas morning the people of Antwerp found them both by the gate of the chancel. They were dead. The cold of the night had frozen the young life and the old. Above them the fresh, sweet rays of the sun touched the thorn-crowned head of the Christ.

Many came and wept. There was a stern old man who sobbed and grieved that he could not right his wrong; a girl [illegible] hair [illegible] bitterly, and a painter who had been looking for the boy who drew the picture of the old wood cutter that he might teach him art and make him great. To all these the young face, turned upward to the light of the great Rubens with a smile upon its mouth, answered: "It is too late!"

Death had been more pitiful to the two than men had been. It took the one in the loyalty of love and the other in the innocence of faith from a world which for love has no reward and for faith no fulfilment.

From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

There has been a remarkable development of Germany's railway system in the last decade. The details of it are of general interest because 92 per cent of the mileage is owned and operated by the government.

Official statistics just published show that the total standard gauge trackage in the empire at the close of 1907 was 34,880.40 miles, or 56,420 kilometers, an increase from 47,119 kilometers in 1897. The trunk lines increased 5.2 per cent in mileage during the decade, while the subsidiary lines increased 50 per cent during that period. At the end of 1907 the trunk lines composed 60 per cent of the total trackage and the subsidiary lines 40 per cent.

In 1897 Germany had 8.70 kilometers of railway for every square kilometer of territory. In 1907 Germany had 10.39 kilometers of road for every square kilometers of territory. For each 10,000 people in the empire there were 8.79 kilometers of railway in 1897, and 9.06 kilometers in 1907.

The value of Germany's railway equipment locomotives, freight and passenger cars—increased from 2,067,840,000 marks in 1897 to 3,248,780,000 marks in 1907. A mark is equal to about 25 cents in our money.

The total income from traffic of all kinds was 1,647,980,000 marks in 1897 to 2,742,280,000 in 1907, the increase in the decade amounting to 67.7 per cent. The freight earnings increased from 1,134,000,000 marks in 1897 to 1,782,720,000 marks in 1907, while the passenger earnings were 472,850,000 marks in 1897 and 747,940,000 marks in 1907. The increase in passenger traffic in ten years amounted to 58.2 per cent.

Passenger fares in Germany have a wide range, there being five classes of tickets. The lowest rate is made for the military. Fourth-class fare is charged on the slow accommodation trains, the rate being a trifle over 1 cent per mile. The first-class fares are higher than those in this country, and are charged on the trains running at the highest speed and making the fewest stops. The compartments of all first-class trains are upholstered in red plush. The second-class compartments differ from the first only in the coloring of the upholstering, which is gray instead of red. The third-class cars are not upholstered. The fourth-class cars are furnished only with wooden benches. Some cars are so arranged as to carry persons paying three different rates of fare, second, third and fourth.

There are 695,550 names on the pay rolls of the German railways, or one for each eighty-nine inhabitants of the empire. The total amount paid to officials and employes in 1907 was 1,083,810,000 marks, or $257,899,180, which is an increase of 80.8 per cent over the amount of the pay rolls in 1897. The average wage was 1,381 marks per annum in 1897 and 1,512 marks, or [illegible] in 1907.

THE NEW GUARDIAN of the TREASURY

FRANKLIN MAC VEAGH, HIS WIFE AND HIS SON, EAMES.

FOR the second time in its history the MacVeagh family of Pennsylvania is represented in a presidential cabinet. The first was Wayne MacVeagh, who was called by Garfield as attorney general. After the president's assassination Mr. MacVeagh tendered his resignation and returned to the practice of his profession in Philadelphia. In 1893 he was sent by Cleveland as ambassador to Italy and held the post until the end of Cleveland's term.

The second member of the family to be called to the cabinet is Franklin MacVeagh of Chicago. He is the brother of the first cabinet appointee and is secretary of the treasury in the Taft cabinet.

Franklin MacVeagh is a representative of that type of citizenship which puts interest of country in advance of party creed. His first presidential vote was for Grant. When Blaine became the leader of the Republican party Mr. MacVeagh declined to follow him. He then supported Cleveland because [illegible] which [illegible] to Mr. MacVeagh. In the second administration of Cleveland Mr. MacVeagh continued to support him. The Democratic state convention of Illinois nominated Mr MacVeagh for United States senator in 1894. Only once before had a Democratic state convention of Illinois nominated a senator for the upper branch of congress. John M. Palmer was chosen and he was elected by the legislature.

After Mr. MacVeagh's nomination he made a canvass of the state for the state ticket. He was nominated for United States senator by the caucus of his party, but as it was in the minority he was defeated in the joint session. Previous to this he was nominated for mayor of Chicago by the Business Men's [illegible]. Once after he was named for the [illegible] office by an independent organization. He declined both nominations. When the Democratic national [illegible] nominated Bryan Mr MacVeagh supported McKinley. He has voted the Republican national ticket ever since. He advocated the election of Taft on political and personal grounds. This is all of the political history of Franklin MacVeagh.

Unique Personality.

He is a rare combination. Commercially considered he is reckoned as one of the most successful business men in the country. He and the late Marshall Field belonged to the same school. There was a strong resemblance between the two in many respects. Field [illegible] in his manner almost [illegible] and was the soul of probity. The [illegible] is true of Franklin MacVeagh. He is not understood by [illegible] who meet him the first time. He [illegible] friends slowly, but once a friend he [illegible] to the end. He is as courte[illegible] in his [illegible] relations as he is in his library. He is the [illegible] of [illegible] breeding. This was [illegible] of the men by [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] better judges of human nature. And yet Mr. MacVeagh has the reserve strength which has made him a potent factor in measures for reform and of the highest civic ideals.

In 1884 he was the speaker before one of the most noted assemblies that ever met in Chicago. It was composed of the foremost business men, lawyers, clergy and scholars of the city. The occasion was the beginning of a reform movement in politics. Mr MacVeagh's expose of corruption, treachery and incompetency in the politics of the hour was regarded as the most [illegible] utterly ever heard in the middle west. He was as precise in his phraseology as a professor in philosophy, but he was mercilessly plain and incisive.

At his club in Chicago, which he visited frequently, he was known as a brief visitor. But while there he was the center of discussion. Many of the civic measures which benefited the city came about from the short views which he expressed in the luncheon hour. In the library of his home on Lake Shore drive he surrounded himself with men of letters and commercial leaders. This library is a remarkable collection, and a foreign scholar who was his guest one evening remarked after he left that there was not an uncut volume or pamphlet in the room. Long ago some one said of him that he knew his Homer as well as if not better than he knew his Bradstreet. In spite of his [illegible] application to business he has had time for travel, and when in the company of his intimate friends he shows that he traveled to purpose, for he forgets nothing worth remembering and becomes animated in relating what he saw and heard. Then, if ever, he is a [illegible] of vibrant personality; then, if ever, he has what somebody has called athleticism of style. His home is a storehouse of all that wealth, culture and good taste combined.

From Law to Commercial Life.

It will be information to many that Franklin MacVeagh read law in New York city after he left college. His partner in law business in New York was Charlton Lewis. He is a graduate of the Columbia Law school of New York. When Judge Edmunds was chosen to revise the statutes of New York he was assisted by Franklin MacVeagh. Lawyers only can appreciate the labor required in such a compilation. The labor bestowed on that work made inroads on the health of young MacVeagh, and he was compelled to travel in order to recuperate.

On his return he felt unable to take up the practice of his profession. At that time Chicago's commercial supremacy was asserting itself, and Mr. MacVeagh took up his residence in that city. In 1865 he helped to establish the wholesale grocery house of Whittaker, Harmon & Co., which soon after became Harmon, MacVeagh & Manner. In 1870 the firm became MacVeagh & Co, the company being his brother, Wayne MacVeagh. When the great fire swept over Chicago and business was staggered by the ruin, Franklin MacVeagh was one of the citizens who stood by and assisted the city to regain its prestige. He was made president of the Citizens' association, and it was through his efforts that the fire department was reorganized and put on a nonpartisan basis on which it has remained ever since. The municipal methods inaugurated in that city in 1872 were fathered by Mr MacVeagh. The city's interests demanded further reform in 1874, and he was placed at the head of movements which have put the municipality on its present high plane. He was again elected at that time president of the Citizens' association. As he persistently declined to run for the higher elective office within the gift of the people, he was tendered and accepted other offices in which he could benefit the people of his adopted home.

When he accepted the head of the treasury department in the present administration he was president of the bureau of charities and Municipal Art league of Chicago, a member of the executive committee of the National Civic federation and vice president of the federation.

There is Scotch blood in the MacVeagh family. When the fire reduced Chicago to a scene of desolation it left Franklin MacVeagh where he started. His storehouse was in ashes, and his home was destroyed. He was one of the first sufferers to erect a frame shack on the lake front, and there he made good his loss. One of the few banks able to resume business at the time was the Commercial National of which Henry S. Eames was president. Eames was still a wealthy man, notwithstanding the misfortunes which came upon him by reason of the great conflagration. Mr. MacVeagh married Miss Eames. This led to his connection later with the bank and for many years he was the dean of the board of directors of the bank and was always punctual in his attendance at the weekly meetings.

Franklin MacVeagh's success in business has amazed his competitors for the reason that his early training and ambition were in the other direction. His natural bent was for a professional career. Commercialism was distasteful to him. This phase in his life has been a problem to many of his friends. Without solving it satisfactorily to themselves, they are agreed that his career is unique. He once attempted to explain it by saying that he went into commercial life in order that he might have plenty of leisure. The explanation only adds to the complexity of the problem. The business grew to marvelous [illegible]. He put his personality into it. He planned; the details were left to others, and the others were men whom he personally selected and instructed. Others have done likewise, but they stopped within the bounds of their business. Mr MacVeagh went beyond his business. He moved forward with every condition that went out in the direction of civic betterment and toward sociology. He never refused his services where his counsel was showed that such services were in line with his duty.

When Mr. MacVeagh was elected president of the Chicago Library club there was some misgiving that he might be a trifle austere, but from the moment he took the gavel he was an agreeable surprise.

The MacVeaghs at Home.

The great rambling stone mansion of the MacVeaghs on the Lake Shore drive of Chicago is one of the houses pointed out to strangers who visit the city. The mistress of this mansion always has been a social figure of Chicago. More than once when the question of social leadership came up in the city her friends insisted that she should take the position. She has always declined, being satisfied to fill the sphere of her own home.

The real home is near Dublin, N. H., where an elaborate cottage is surrounded by an estate of 500 acres. In this retreat in the hills of New Hampshire Mr MacVeagh spends his summer, leaving his home on the Lake Shore drive in June and returning in October.

The third member of the family is a son, Eames MacVeagh, who [illegible] to his father's busin[illegible].

Birthplace on Historic Ground.

Franklin MacVeagh was born in an unpretentious house that [illegible] on the McNutt road just out of Phoenixville, Pa. Along the road which passes the house the cannon for the Continental army was hauled from Warwick furnace, nine miles away, when this country was having its struggle with Great Britain. Along this road the army of Cornwallis marched in 1777. A half mile from the house stands the stone tablet which marks the point at which the British general's troopers halted before retracing their steps toward Philadelphia for winter quarters. In the town of Phoenixville the father of the MacVeagh boys kept the Franklin hotel.

Wayne MacVeagh was the orator of the family. Old residents of Phoenixville are fond of telling how he used to mount the store boxes on the sidewalk and declaim. Franklin was not much of a talker, but he inherited his father's Irish wit and loved to play pranks, but even then he joked in that quiet manner which is still characteristic of him when he is surrounded by intimate friends.

Both of the MacVeaghs were sent to Yale after they had finished at Phoenixville.

HALF A THOUSAND MEN KILLED

And in Half the Cases There's No Compensation to Make Up for Lost Income. Families Bear the Biggest Burden. Report of the Pittsburg Survey as to Industrial Accidents in the American Steel District.

PITTSBURG.—President Taft's recommendations as to employers' liability, in his inaugural address, back up the report issued by the Pittsburg survey on industrial accidents in the Pennsylvania steel district. This has been the first case to case investigation made in America, has covered 526 deaths and nearly as many serious injury cases, and the massed facts brought out are startling in their significance. What is true of Pittsburg is probably true of other big industrial centers.

When the mills are running full, half a thousand men are killed each year in Allegheny county in the course of their [illegible]

The problem is not a simple one, and to show this the report starts off with Carnegie relief fund, a few co-operative relief associations, and the one case in a hundred where large damages are secured under the master and servant law, the major part of the families of these dead workmen have been left in hard straits; 4-year-old children have had to evade the child labor law and become bread winners, mothers of four, five and six children have had to leave their homes and go out to work, and a long list of deprivations and hardships has been imposed upon the next generation.

This is the gist of the findings as published in the current issue of Charities and the Commons. The report is the work of Crystal Eastman, secretary of the New York branch of the American Association for Labor Legislation. The investigation extended throughout a year, and the staff has included electrical and mechanical engineers, and Slovak, Russian, Bohemian and Italian interpreters, for many of the men killed were foreigners. Miss Eastman is herself a lawyer. The coroner's office, progressive superintendents, claim agents, attorneys, labor union officials and hospital superintendents have co-operated, and there is a growing disposition in Pittsburg to square with the charges of wholesale slaughter in the mills [illegible] at the real facts.

These four [illegible] put the two horns of the industrial accident dilemma as it faces the public. Who is to pay the bill? Who pays the bill? The report is divided into two sections, and gives the data collected on each.

Why Industrial Accidents Happen.

The old easy saying that 95 per cent of work accidents are due to the carelessness of workmen is the first thing to be thrown into the scrap heap by this study of a year's cases. 25 per cent are classed as inevitable upon no one can the blame be put—two big furnace explosions, for instance, in which an expert jury exonerated everybody, an Italian who was killed in trying to rescue a companion from gas, a workman buried beneath a pile of wire coils, when it fell, and the like of that.

The 32 per cent of cases attributed to the man killed is not a blanket indictment against the workman. In 32 cases the victim was "green," or could not understand the warnings given in English. Thirteen were not men, but boys. For instance, Two boys were killed in the Homestead steel works while they were asleep. Both accidents happened at 1:30 in the morning. One boy was a "pull-up" fifteen years old, who had been working eight hours of a thirteen-hour night turn. He had a few minutes to rest, and went back of the furnace to lie down in a wheel barrow. While sleeping there he was struck and killed by the extending arm of a ladle which the crane man was bringing back to the pit. The other was an eighteen-year-old "hook-on" who after seven hours of his working night, climbed into a buggy and went to sleep. The crane man, not knowing this, lowered an iron bucket on the buggy and killed him.

Twelve deaths were due to dizziness, epileptic seizures at work and the like; in eight cases only the man was drunk. There are left, then, 80 cases out of the whole year's death toll in which the workman's "carelessness" was the cause of his death. The report analyzes these at length and finds only a small share of them due to bullheaded carelessness, as the angle-shearman in the case cited. In most cases, the carelessness is "inattention" due in part to long hours, heat, noise, intense speed, or "recklessness" which goes with the industry, and without which dangerous trades could not be carried on.

Thirteen per cent of the accidents are attributed to fellow workmen and the elements in these cases are about the same as in those where the victim was himself to blame. Twelve per cent are due to foremen. Cases where rules of safety are not enforced, where materials were not furnished the men when requested (one miner, crushed by a fall of slate, had made a request for posts two days before), and where reported defects are not repaired, are charged against them.

There are all kinds of foremen, foremen so small that they will send men into danger where they would not go themselves; and foremen so brave that they order their men to stand back while they go in themselves. Thus we have a story of an Irish foreman who ordered a lot of Italians to work under a dangerous overhanging bank while he stood clear of the hazard. The bank fell and one of them was killed. And then we have a story of an Italian sub-foreman, in charge of sixteen men, who, when he had waited five or ten minutes for a charge of dynamite to go off, warned the men to keep out of the way, and got down into the ditch to see what was the matter. Just as he got there the charge exploded and he was killed.

More common, however, is the foreman, who, through hurry, indifference, or forgetfulness, [illegible] "green" men into positions which mean danger to them or who stands by and allows incompetent people to try difficult and risky operations.

Thirty-five per cent of the accidents are attributed to the employer. This does not mean, Miss Eastman writes, that each of these accidents was caused by some personal conscious failure on the part of the employer. It means rather that the accident can be traced, either wholly or in part, to an inadequacy in that part of the productive machinery which the employer furnishes, and for which he, if any one, is responsible. Four other men were killed because some platform, ladder or plank gave way under them. Twenty-two men were killed because something over their heads gave way and a heavy object fell upon them. The commonest instance of this is the breaking of crane chains. One man was killed by the falling of a coal [illegible] another crushed by the collapse of the floor above him. A cracked [illegible] a steam-pipe valve which would not work, an electric wire with the insulation worn off, etc. These are some of the other defects from which death resulted.

In addition to defects, the employer is more clearly responsible where there is lack of provision for safety in the [illegible] of construction of plant or machinery. The report says:

Andrew Jubstad, on April 19, 1907, was caught in a shaft around which there was no railing, and killed. This was in the Twenty-ninth Street works of the Carnegie Steel company. On October 19, 1907, Gustija Kasanovich was lifting something under the direction of a foreman when his foot slipped and caught in the uncovered cogwheels of a roll-table. He died in 30 minutes. This was at the South Side plant of the Jones and Laughlin company. On August 31, 1906, Walter V. B. Calhoun was painting the iron work above some shafting at the John Eichley, Jr. Company's works at Twenty-[illegible] street. His coat caught in an uncovered set screw, he was carried around the shaft, and killed.

George Romonofsky was crushed while making a chain coupling on the Union railroad, August 5, 1906. Another Gallagher fell from a five-foot platform around the top of a furnace at Jones and Laughlin's, where there was no railing. Frank Shellaby fell against an uncovered switch-board at the Westinghouse Air Brake company, and was killed, on March 14, 1907. In each of these latter cases and many others like them, reasonable provisions for safety had not been made, although no requirements of the Pennsylvania law had been violated.

In conclusion, this section of the report looks for prevention through better state inspection, greater safety requirements in the law, publicity as to accidents, and the study of every fatality by technical men. But it does not look for any large decrease in accidents until they are made a reckonable monetary loss to the employer, through some form of fixed compensation. Fewer men will be killed when it costs more to kill them.

[illegible] the Burden of Accidents Falls

Of the 526 people killed, 258 were married men with families; nearly half of the single men were contributing to the support of others. In these two groups, [illegible] left [illegible] not one dollar of compensation [illegible] the employer, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] reasonable funeral expenses, but would not replace any of the lost income. 62 families received something over this $100, but not more than $500. 61 families received more than this, some few as much as $2,000, but most of them under $1,000. In other words, over half were left to bear the entire income loss and in only one-fifth of the cases did the families receive for the death of a regular income provider more than $500—a sum which would approximate one year's income of the lowest paid of the workers killed.

The report goes on to the discussion of injury cases.

The first six men totally disabled for life, one of whom lost an arm and a leg, one of whom [illegible] and four of whom will [illegible] for the rest of their lives. Of these six men three received no compensation, one $30, one $125 and one $[illegible]. [illegible] 27 cases [illegible] partially disabled for life, their earning power reduced on an average [illegible] per cent, compensation was as follows:

Twelve received no compensation.
Seven received $100 or less.
Six received $101 to [illegible].
Two received over $[illegible].

In the third class [illegible] only temporarily disabled although certain cases show as great a disproportion between loss and compensation the averages for 229 cases show a much more nearly adequate compensation. The total loss of income for the 229 cases amounts to $37,677, while the total compensation is $6,719, nearly one-sixth of the loss.

For the loss of one arm two men received no compensation, one [illegible]. For the loss of a leg compensation runs from nothing to $225, but in most of these cases the cost of an artificial limb is included in the compensation stated. Out of 10 cases of men who lost two or more fingers six received nothing in compensation, one $15, two $100 each and one for the loss of three fingers, $250. Compensation in these 10 cases averages $19 a finger.

The report goes into the measure of actual hardship involved, gives details as to the more fortunate families who were provided for by insurance, compensation or grown children. Of the histories given of less favored cases, one is selected:

Alfred Putnam, employed by the Pennsylvania railroad, was working on a freight train at night. Either the brake chain or the shaft of the brake, broke, and Putnam was thrown between the cars. He lost his right arm and his left leg. He was a man of 22 with a wife and two children looking to him for support. The Pennsylvania Railroad company makes no direct compensation for injuries to its workmen, but it pays the running expenses of a relief association. To this Putnam belong. He was in the third class, paying $2.25 a month dues, and when injured his benefits amounted to $[illegible] a week for a year, and $5.25 a week afterwards. Putnam had earned $21 a week. His wife now adds a little to their [illegible] benefit by taking in sewing.

As a solution of the situation, the report has this to suggest:

Facts have been set forth which we believe justify legislative interference. (1) For the purpose of reducing the number of preventable industrial accidents, and (2) for the purpose of adjusting more fairly the economic burden entailed by them. It is submitted that one law might be the major solution of both of these problems, i. e., a law in which the employer's liability principle would commonly be abandoned and in which uniform compensation for all industrial accidents (except those resulting from the willful misconduct of the man injured) would be required. (1) Such a law, by making accidents first of all a steady and reckonable expense to employers, would tend to lessen those accidents the prevention of which directly or indirectly depends upon his will. (2) Such a law, by making compensation for accidents a regular cost of the industry, would result in shifting a share of the economic loss of each accident from the family immediately afflicted to the whole body of consumers.

CURES SKIN DISEASES

In this article we want to explain to you the cause of skin diseases, and also offer suggestions, founded on [illegible] and experience, which will enable you to cure yourself if you are afflicted with any of the various forms of this trouble.

The skin receives its necessary nourishment from the blood. Every pore is kept open and every gland kept healthy by continually feeding on the nutritious properties which are distributed throughout the system by a pure, rich blood supply. As long as this normal condition exists the cuticle will be soft, smooth, and free from eruptions; when however the circulation is contaminated with humors, and impurities its supply of nutritive properties is diminished, and it becomes a sharp, acrid fluid which diseases instead of preserves the natural health and texture of the skin.

Lying just beneath the outer covering or tissue skin is a sensitive membranous flesh which surrounds and protects the tiny veins, pores and glands. It is here the impurities of the blood are deposited, and the acrid matter causes irritation and inflammation which splits or breaks the thin, tissue-like cuticle, and the result is outwardly manifested in Eczema, Tetter, Salt Rheum, or some other disfiguring or annoying eruptive disease.

It can readily be seen that since Skin Diseases are the result of bad blood, there can be but one way to cure them—purify the blood. Salves, washes, lotions, etc., are not able to do so, because they do not reach the blood. Such treatment is of no value except for its ability to [illegible] relieve itching and assist in keeping the skin clean.

S. S. S. cures Skin Diseases of every kind by neutralizing the acids and removing all humors from the blood. S. S. S. cools the acid-heated circulation, builds it up to its normal strength and thickness, multiplies its rich, nutritious corpuscles, and adds to its purity in every way. Then the skin, instead of being irritated and inflamed by sour impurities, is nourished, soothed and softened by this cooling, healthy stream of blood. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers, and therein lies its ability to cure skin diseases. The trouble cannot remain when the cause has been removed, and S. S. S. will certainly remove the cause. It cures Eczema, Acne, Tetter, Salt Rheum, pimples, boils, blackheads, etc., and all eruptions of the skin. Book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

For [illegible] years I was severely troubled with a bad skin disease, located principally on the shins. The trouble would appear in the form of [illegible] yellow blisters, [illegible] by very severe itching, etc. I tried sarsaparillas, so-called blood purifiers, salves, ointments, lotions and [illegible] out under a physician, but nothing did me any good. [illegible] discouraged I left off all this treatment, and just about this time I saw S. S. S. advertised. One day I decided to give this medicine a trial, and after using it for a short while I began to improve. Of course I continued S. S. S. and it cured me completely. Quite a while has elapsed since I was cured and there has never been the slightest indication of the return of the trouble.

THE JUDGMENT OF DANIEL

By HENRY MILNER RIDEOUT

MR. DAN TOWERS was wondering how long his money would hold out, and whence the next would come. A less tranquil man might have worried; but to him it was a pleasant process, as when a child wonders about the stars, or the habits of angle worms, or the estate of being a big man. Below his hotel veranda, up the broad sweep of Orchard road, the rickshaw lanterns flitted past like a procession of jogging fireflies; street lamps overarched with waringin foliage of a mineral, theatric green, cast here and there a snowy glare of light on the bluff road, showing the gleam of brass-bound shafts, flying wheels, broad bobbing disks of Chinese hats and the quick trot of naked legs, stout-calved and saffron. To young Mr. Towers, with his chair, and with the ice tingling in the stengah at his elbow, the stale menace of bankruptcy was no more a worry than it might be to one of those coolies, pattering down the humid vista of sweet-scented greenery under tropic stars.

The new chance, therefore, came quickly.

Navigating among the deserted tables appeared two huge Dutchmen, shaven-headed, large-faced, with the national swag-belly set more generously off by their clothes of white duck.

"Pardon, sir, is this Mr. Too-verss?"

"Towers is my name, sir," replied the young man, rising and signaling a Chinese boy to bring chairs.

"Ah, thank you," puffed the fatter of the two strangers as they seated themselves heavily. "Mr. Tau-yerss, may we haf a few minutes—ah—conversation with you? Yes? It will be profitable to us both, that is to say, all three; if, as I learn, you are a mining engineer?"

"A job," thought Dan joyfully. "That 'Profession' column in the register is good joss." Aloud he said: "You have learned correct, Mr.—"

"You are not now professionally—ah—engaitched?" continued Heer Romeijn, elevating his pudgy feet to the chair arms and puffing furiously to rekindle his cheroot. "No? What experyence haf you unter-gone?"

Dan recited briefly a few years' history that would have made Ulysses appear a domestic [illegible].

"Goot!" sighed Romeijn. "Then we now propose to you a goot work."

He explained their plans, the "co-partner" assisting from time to time in a bass grumble or disputing in Dutch, with shifty glances at Dan.

"So that iss our offer," concluded Romeijn: "twelf hoondert guilders a month, and expenses to and from Kajigambang. A six months' contract. Half the salary in advance, half at the end. And you to examine and report fully on the deposits of the—ah region. Of course, it iss all to keep secret from now forwarts. You do accept, Mr. Tau-wers?"

"What kind of a country is this Kajigambang?"

Heer Romeijn looked at Heer Openhym.

"O' course," said Dan dryly. "But I mean the what-you-call-it—the topography, and the people?"

Openhym explained that the approach inland from the coast was by a most lovely navigable river, leading up among hills that were a natural sanatorium and paradise. The natives, like the Japanese, were simple and peace-loving.

"Here iss the cone-tract," announced Romeijn, drawing forth a paper and a fountain stylus. "Will you please to sign?"

"Nanti s'kit," said Mr. Towers craftily. "Till tomorrow. Let me size it up by daylight."

Next day the three men signed the document, with general satisfaction, and the partners paid over to their new employe 3,600 guilders, as half pay in advance.

"In six months we will deposit the rest to your order at the Hongkong bank here," said the senior partner. "We haf been obliged to—ah—charter a steamer for your travel—the Bintang Berekor; she will sail in three days. We will—what iss it?—see you off." He laughed heartily over a tall pahit, drank it, and smacked his lips.

"Lala," thought Dan, as he trundled in a rickshaw along the glaring streets of Singapore to buy supplies, "this looks like a square deal with a new deck. Charterin' a steamer—for me!"

He visited many shops, acquiring biscuits, chlorodyne, candles, mineral water, tinned meats, powder, shot, cartridges, tobacco, boots, the complete works of Mr. Jacobs, and whisky. In the middle of these purchases he was struck with an omission. "Hold on!" he addressed himself. "'Fore the money gives out go get your life insured again." Mr. Towers, though anything but a cautious young man, had formed this habit; "because," he had told scoffing friends, "if I ever did go out, it would keep brother Joe in cigars."

In a dusky office on Collyer Quai, overlooking the intricate bustle of vehicles and the flotilla of tossing sampans, he found a large, wholesome young Englishman busily reading a pictorial weekly under a punkah. Dan liked his looks; insurance business did not seem to be pressing and they had a long talk on weather, ships, cricket and baseball, the unloveliness of Germans, war, and the delights of going home with a fortune. Then, coming regretfully to business:

"It's a joke to call you a risk," declared young Mr. Scarlett. "Just fill out this blank, will you?—And, I say, why not come round to tiffin with me? Right-oh! Then we'll go see the doctor fellow, ... and have him thump you, and all that rot."

"Thanks," said Mr. Towers, abstractedly. "Can-do—Say, how do you spell this Kajigambang?"

"What!" said the agent. "You're not going there?"

"Sure," affirmed his client.

"Look here," said Dan, in mild astonishment. "What's wrong?"

"That's nice," drawled Mr. Towers. "'Cause I've signed on for six months."

"Not you! Not really!" said the other with genuine interest. He shut his desk with a bang. "I've done enough work for one morning. Let's toddle out and have a drink and talk this over. My dear chap, it would be about worth my billet to issue you a policy."

Over their drinks and their curry the reason became more evident. Kajigambang, declared Scarlett, was one long fever march of trackless jungle, inhabited by an eccentric little naked people, who, lying in bushes, shot poisoned darts out of blow pipes. As for Heeren Romeijn and Openhym—

"Did they speak of getting you a toelating card to travel in the Netherlands Indies?—No?—Well, there you are; they're trying to run you in on the quiet, because the authorities would never allow you to visit such a place. You'd need the whole Dutch army along with you. Those two are the biggest pair of wasters unhung. Do you know what they'll do?" inquired Mr. Scarlett, smiling politely. "They've paid you one-half, and that's all they ever will pay. After your report's in, you can go to their bank and whistle for the rest. [illegible]."

"This is awful interesting news to me," Dan averred. "I wish I'd met you first."

"And I don't like to be disagreeable about it," rejoined Scarlett, "but I shouldn't touch the job at any price. I've seen that lot before. They want some cheap information enough to float a company on and get government support. Those two are just taking a long chance that you'll get there and back."

"There's no use being sour-ball about it, is there?" inquired Mr. Towers, cheerily. "Look here, what'll you bet I don't come back alive in six months?"

"Well, by Jove! Are you serious? Now I call that sporting!" exclaimed the Englishman. "Let me see. If you like, I'll lay you five to four or say dollars to guilders that you don't come back at all. Fifty a side, to be called for by the winner after ... two years, eh?—Done? Right-oh!" ... bled in a book. "Do you know, I'd be very glad to lose that bet."

"Thanks," replied Dan. "I've got a kind o' prejudice that same way."

The character of his purchases that afternoon was strangely different. After a painful searching out of obscure shops and rusty go-downs, they included six ancient Winchester rifles and some fifteen revolvers, all of the same noble caliber; three dozen gardener's trowels; several thousand rounds of ammunition; three great rolls of copper trolley wire, new and shining; a second or third hand tricycle, extremely clumsy and solid; strong wire screening in many sheets, of a microscopical mesh; a bale of old gunny-sacks, much rice, and a small grindstone. Surveying these, as the bullock cart crawled off toward the quai, Dan allowed himself to smile.

"There," he said to the mystified clerks. "I've done a little insurance, all on my own."

On the night before the Bintang Berekor was to sail, Dan, stretched along a mattress on the bridge deck, woke to find himself being kicked by a group of shouting barbarians. He leaped up, and was affectionately manhandled.

"You old Injun! Hi, Dan, wake up! What's the game now? Where you going? Same old hombre, ain't he? Why didn't you wait for us?"

So began an all-night session, by candlelight and over many glasses, with his friends Bassett, Jimmy Folsom and Samuel Bird, returned from prospecting in the outskirts of the Shan states. Through the blue cigar smoke there sounded strange, furious narratives; the explosion of long pent-up jokes; and bitter complaints that the three were not ready to sail with Mr. Towers. That gentleman said nothing of young Scarlett's revelations. He never believed in talking before the event.

At noon, in the middle of a lively reception and "Duck-and-Dorsies," the Bintang got up anchor. Romeijn and Openhym, Scarlett and the three Americans dropped astern in their sampans.

"We'll come anyway!" shouted Samuel Bird, defiantly.

"Bring plenty o' these!" returned Mr. Towers, shying a bottle down at him. And then it was "Chin-chin," "Adois," the waving of helmets and a fantastic pantomime from Mr. Scarlett, closing with the ejaculation, through his stick, of imaginary darts at the two Hollanders.

A weary fortnight afterward Dan learned with some surprise that he was to be landed at the port of Fak-Fak in New Guinea.

"But you were chartered," he told the friendly German captain, "to carry me to Telok Kaji."

"Ho-ho!" laughed Captain Thies. "So dose two, dey told you zo? My boy, dot iss komisch! I go now to Wahaai of Ceram, und zo to Batavia. Dose two, dey pay your passaitch to Fak-Fak, dot iss alles. You take prau to Kaji. Ho-ho! Dose two charter me. Dot iss goot choke."

And so Dan, with a new grievance against the gentlemen from Holland, sailed southward in a verminous prau with a crew of piratical brown men. The blistering, perpendicular sun blaze, the sour smell of bilge and sweating blacks, the imperceptible drift of the prau through the dancing blurs of heat over the steel floor of ocean,

"THERE IS MY SACRIFICE!" SHOUTED THE NEW PRIEST."

these wore into the brain with a bitter, hard, unrelenting monotony. Yet the masterless spirit of the youngster kept him working—in the brief coolness at sunrise and by the pinpoint flame of a midnight lantern—grinding a razor edge upon his trowels and fitting together ingenious mechanisms of stout wire. In a fortnight of this, the prau raised against the dawn a black saw-tooth rim of palm coast, ragged pearly mists exhaling from fever lands, and a wide river mouth that shone toward the orient sun like liquid copper.

"Good," said Dan. "I want all the orang-lauts I can hire. Need them in my business. Follow me, and you won't get hurt."

Established in a bamboo hut, he went on preparing his expedition. To his first half dozen men he served out one trowel each; these, set on heavy staves of rattan, made most lethal spears, greatly to be desired.

"Use these well," he promised, "and I shall give each of you a loud gun-magic such as kills rats and men."

The story of that magic, skillfully spread, created in the village the equivalent of peace.

When rumor declared that 30 more beautiful spear-heads were forthcoming, a small camp of unemployed warriors ate and slept before Dan's bungalow. Meantime the village tailor was making, to his order, some 50 suits of gunny-sacking—loose jackets and trousers, which Dan himself coated thickly with coal tar. The six ancient Winchesters, radiating fanwise and cunningly connected by the wire mechanisms, he mounted on the rusty tricycle; this when weighted with an ammunition box and the grindstone to withstand recoil, became a machine gun capable of firing 66 shots with 12 turns of a crank. Next, of the wire netting he made large globes, much like enormous fly-traps or the screens for stage gas jets in an old-fashioned theater.

"Now," said Mr. Towers proudly, "let's see your old poison brads come a-blowin' through those, or that coal-tar armor make-up!"

At this point, finding himself half dead with fever, he announced that for two weeks no one must approach the hut; the soonglap paling besar, the Greatest Magic for this journey, must be prepared slowly and alone; and so, shutting his doors, he lay down among the provisions, and in that stifling hovel wrestled with delirium and death. All he remembered was how many years it took to open a bottle of mineral water, how the quinine throbbed and crashed full orchestra in his head, how hard it was to persuade a distant, invisible Scarlett that this fellow wasn't dead yet.

"I leave it to an umpire!" the squatting villagers heard a strange voice cry within the hut. "I leave it to an umpire. ... Hear that? ... don't pay bets till he's dead, he says ... I know better ... he ain't!" Then followed sounds of threshing, and snatches of quavered song. A great magic must have been toward.

But in four weeks he was on the march with an army that called him Tuan Nakim, the lord magistrate. With six-and-thirty spearmen, a long train of bearers, and the tricycle battery, he tramped painfully inland.

The first battle of this anabasis opened silently, in a clearing, with tiny puffs of white showering from deep-bosomed thickets. Two bearers who had broken orders and marched in the van suddenly sat down, and, with faces calm but ash-gray, plucked from between their brown ribs the thorns of death. More darts hopped and glanced on the black tarred buff-coats. The spearmen hastily donned their fly-trap helmets, while Dan swept the thicket with a crashing volley from the machine gun. Leaving two men to reload and advance it, he charged with his troops and emptied Krag and revolver at fleeing brown bodies. Three times the enemy made a venomous stand, but the tricycle gun worked well, the spearmen fought ferociously, and the rout was bloody and final. That evening, at a muster of troops which lacked only four men, the Tuan Nakim made oration and eulogy. Conspicuous in the pursuit had been one valiant bearer, armed simply with his wooden piculan.

"Stand forth, Mistuh Geo'ge Wash'n'ton," Dan commanded. He incased the brown hero in a buff coat, round the body of which he painted a white stripe.

"That," said Dan, "is the D. S. O."

He slipped over the warrior's head a heavy neck-ring of shining copper wire.

"That," he continued, "is the V. C.—No seniority or political pulls in this army—Mr. Geo'ge Wash'n'ton Robert Fitzsimmons Lee, I promote you to the rank of brigadier general!" And he handed the new general an army revolver mounted on a shoulder-stock of ironwood.

So fierce was the emulation thenceforward, that after five skirmishes and two pitched battles, four more brigadier generals, Peter Jackson, Ulysses S. Grant, George Dixon and Napoleon Erastus Bonaparte, received D. S. O., V. C. and the Loud Magic. All the coolie bearers were armed with seven-foot carven blowpipes taken from the slain. And the army marched on victoriously, "with our heads," said Dan, "in bird cages."

At last the scouts reported the rising of spurs and foothills before them, and a great campong by a lakeside. Two days later, unopposed, the army marched up to the village walls. Neither guard nor lounger appeared; the place might have been desolate; but from within the walls of split bamboo, came the heavy beating of drums and savage chanting.

In a clear space among the squatting huts, the whole populace had formed a wide ring. Bush-headed warriors in russet armor of tree-bark, huddling women in gay skirts with naked babies astride their hips, all were intently watching a transaction within the circle. The drums had ceased, and in a silence of broiling noon, Dan heard the wail of a child. Alone in the center stood a little girl, bound with nanas cord, whimpering before an altar of fresh sods; and striding toward her, horrid with finery and paint, a tall priest held aloft a knife.

"Stop!" he cried in Malay. "What god demands a sacrifice?"

The interpreter echoed the question, loud as a herald. The astonished priest replied

"A local godling," sneered Mr. Towers. "I am high priest to Arvana, god of swordhilts. I am king of the Loud Magic."

A murmur circled the villagers and died in a pulsing silence.

Dan stooped, cut the cords and patted the head of the terrified baby. She scampered off like a rabbit; and with a cry of joy a little brown woman ran forward and caught her up.

Suddenly the priest rushed with the knife. But Dan was an old hand at gunplay—the magic spoke first and the savage fell sprawling.

"There is my sacrifice!" shouted the new priest.

He paused for the drama to take effect; then before an uproar could rise called loudly:

"There shall be no more killing of children. The god is satisfied. Send the kapala to me at sunset, and I shall tell him how to end your troubles without payment and without sacrifice."

Turning, he stalked out of the village, followed by his troops. The wicker gates slid to, amid shouts and babel. All that afternoon a loud chatter of politics resounded from within. But at sunset, while Dan sat waiting on his camp stool under a tamarind tree, the headman drew near, humbly, for conference.

"Tuan Sultan," translated the interpreter, with a new and deeper respect, "the jungle fighters and devils' men whom the Tuan Sultan gloriously overthrew from his path, these and others like them have long harassed the village. Many years, and every year it has been the same. Also, there has been famine. The priest that the Tuan Sultan slew, he would have offered up the daughter of the kapala against the evil luck. Therefore, the heart of the kapala runs toward this new god, Sparer of Children."

"But first the kapala asks, What will the new god perform upon these jungle men?"

"This," said Dan. A kalong hung head downward from a top branch; he jerked out his revolver, fired, and the huge bat thumped the ground like a heavy fruit. "So will I abolish and destroy the enemies of this campong."

"I will live in the village, and it shall grow fat. They shall build me a sultan's house. But the kapala shall in all things rule, steering the prau of government with the rudder of my wisdom."

So Mr. Daniel Towers became emperor above this village king; and the temple, enlarged, and beautified with red and gilt the new carvings, became the imperial quarters. His army settled amicably down among the villagers, while from a veranda piously supplied with chickens, mangoes, fish, chillies and pisangs, the Sultan searched the headman's heart with questions. It was an exalted life; not utterly alone, for Ketchil, baby brother to the little Iphigenia, dared with fat and inco-ordinate legs to crawl upon the very matting of the Sultan's throne, and to play with the silver chain of his compass. An exalted and a happy life; not an idle one, for when Dan had learned the country and the disposition of the enemy, he fought a series of crushing battles, beat off a besieging party of allied Papuans, and terrified into peace a wide strip of jungle. After these victories, he was deified, and children were carried to the veranda for his blessing.

Gold, thus far, he did not go about to seek; for though an unwilling deity, Dan found himself a happy, absorbed and fatherly emperor. His villagers were poor in foodstuffs; he made them till the land, established paddy nurseries and taught them to grow rice by the "Na Dum" method of Siam. Drawing timber from a neglected forest of teak, he built such a palisade as changed the wattled hamlet into an impregnable city of refuge, and would have made his fortune if supplied to shipbuilders. Wells he sank inside and watch towers he raised at the four corners and the gate—watch towers which the kapala persisted in adorning with horned statues of the Sultan Dan, in black, polished tamarind wood—scowling effigies, popular, but not flattering.

Months of serene authority sped by in the enchanted silences of lake and valley and dusky, pointed aisles of bamboo. Like Alfred the Great, Dan divided the uncounted days into hours, hanging in the turrets at the gate a hollowed log for the watchmen to beat. He set out fields of millet. He found groves full of stick-lac, and his grateful subjects dyed for him imperial robes of scarlet. He cured fever and the colics of infants. He caught young banteng, and broke them to the plow. And so, from the sacred veranda, after busy days, he could hear the songs of contented little people pattering homeward along the winding paths; could see the girls, in pink or yellow loin-cloths, as slender and erect under their head-burdens as a procession of Greek goddesses, file through the gate, returning from the mountain village markets; could see the naked children scampering in the dust, their bellies tight-ballooned with fatness.

The six months flowed by, and others, before he explored the countryside for gold. He was gone many days, and when he returned, they saw that the heart of the Sultan was heavy. Often in the cool half-light before dawn, when the tillers of the field trudged by shouldering their wooden plows, they found the demigod smoking pensively before the gate, or pacing in meditation, a tall figure in his red robe.

At last rumors came of other white demigods marching toward the hills. Dan swore, briefly.

"It's some damned Dutchman or other," he growled. "Here's where the whole thing goes futt." He laughed rather bitterly. "Guess I must be turnin' black—in love with this crowd. Humph! It's a funny world."

That night he stayed awake and sorrowful, listening to the chant from distant huts, the cooing of sleepy wood pigeons, the boom of the time-log beating away, perhaps, the last hours of his happy reign.

Next morning, when Messrs. Folsom, Bassett and Samuel Bird swung cheerfully down to the village gate, they saw, within, a tall, black-bearded, royal figure, robed in vermilion.

"It's him!" shouted Bassett. "Ya-a-ay!"

"The old hoss!" Folsom cried in amazement.

"Hello, Dowie!" called Mr. Samuel Bird.

The three rushed forward yelling. But even then they were checked by the gesture of command. This was not the same man they had known.

"Boys," said the bearded king, "I sure am awful pleased to see you. But don't throw my game. No glad hands here in public. I'm a Sultan ... also a god. Do me a salaam to save my face; then afterward we'll talk private."

After a second of blank wonder, the three fell prostrate, wailing joyfully—"Salaam alikum! Hoch der Kaiser! Man Suey."

"First rate," said Dan calmly. "I hereby appoint you all demigods and ministers of agriculture."

Inside the hut assigned them for the Sultan kept his temple to himself—they held a loud reunion, all talking at once.

"... So we thought you might still be alive. Have a drink, god. A rescue party ... came round from Batavia, and our schooner's waitin' down at Telok Kaji. ... Jimmy, get out a box of cigars for this here King ... Sure! a good job up Sumatra way ... Pay enough for all hands. ... Ha! the wind blew through his whiskers! ... so you come along up with us to Singapore. Oh, and here's a chit for you from Scarlett. ... Say, ain't it good to see this old hombre again, boys? ... Came straight up without pulling a gun; you sure have got those niggers scared all down the line. ... Look here, Dan, I don't like this Elijah II. make-up o' yours. ... So you pack up and come along with us."

It was a long day and night of talk, but of only moderate carouse, for Dan enforced upon them the dignity of responsible gods. Next day, while they slept after their journey, he sat considering in his veranda. Scarlett's letter lay open before him, and Ketchil, the baby of privilege, drowsily studied it over the Sultan's knee.

"... as I said, those two Dutchmen never deposited their money. ... hope you'll be able to get back. ..." Dan read. He grinned at the sleepy infant, then pondered gravely.

"And all these hills full o' gold!" he thought. The richest vein of it led straight down under the new rice fields. He looked about the peaceful campong, sadly. He had no illusions about the glamour of gold mining; often he had seen their towns spring up in the west, grim and roaring, full of gamblers and scum and drink and strife, and here in the orient, with the slaving of coolies. ... This wattled village, existing slowly and happily under the gleam of sunny foliage beside the enchanted lake—"It's mine!" he declared. "I've made 'em! They're my kids." He saw it harried, changed forever, ruined, to fill the pockets of two Dutchmen's breeches.

"And I've got to leave you all." He spoke aloud, regretfully, to the slumbering houses. "Well, then I'll—I never did it before, did I? But these two have broke their half of it already. Maskee! here goes!"

He laid before him a sheet of paper, dipped his pen, and in the terse style of Julius Caesar, began his report:

"Messrs. Romeijn and Openhym.

"Gentlemen—I have examined thoroughly region inland from Kajigambang, as per contract. Regret to report difficulties in way of transportation are insurmountable, natives extremely hostile and dangerous (he patted the chubby legs of the sleeping Anak Ketchil) "and the deposits not worth a d—. Yours truly,

"D. TOWERS."

"Humph! Not even tell the boys," he mused.

He drew a long breath, and once more looked down upon the village, smiling queerly.

"It's probly just a sort o' [illegible] for you," he said, slowly. "But I'm leavin' you tomorrow ... probably won't ever see you again, and—" Something choked him—"and this is ... I can kind o' leave my blessing ... on my people."

The Old Fashioned Woman

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

A WOMAN was heard to remark the other day that she was "afraid" that she was "old-fashioned."

Is it necessary nowadays to give an excuse for not caring to follow the latest cry in fads and fashions? If one deprecates the flaunting vagaries of those who run to riotous excesses in their demeanor as well as in their apparel, must one be contemptuously set down as an old fogy who sees no good in anything modern, and is hopelessly out of tune and touch with the present generation? When those modern Athenians who are perpetually seeking some new thing call the more conservative people "old-fashioned" just what do they mean? Is it an opprobrious epithet or a compliment?

The old-fashioned woman looked well to the ways of her household. She was not particularly ambitious for a career or a calling. She did not know that she was downtrodden, or realize her ignominious servitude to a false assumption of superiority on the part of the unfair sex. She found the homage and chivalry of mankind delightful, and took it at its face value. Nor did she trouble herself about the potential reconstruction of the family on a new basis of relationship. She was not struggling to be recognized as man's equal, for she found it tacitly admitted on all sides that she was man's superior. She felt a deep and rational delight in various concerns and enterprises, but these were not of such a nature as to call for the sacrifice of her first and nearest interests, which were maternal and domestic.

The old-fashioned woman was demonstrative. She believed that it did no great harm, if you cared for people, to signify it by some spoken or gestured endearment once in a while. She would not have thought very much of the chilly hauteur that bows out a guest from the corner of the drawing room most distant from the door. Her hospitality, if it was not effusive, was at least genuine and cordial. She welcomed the coming and sped the parting guest as though she meant the hearty greeting and the reluctant farewell.

There was no bridge in those days to [illegible] the art of [illegible]; the bridgette was an unknown type, as was the suffragette. There were no automobiles, and there were no wild and whirling excursions to nowhere in particular, with no view of the scenery, merely for the sake of the mad, ecstatic sensation of rapid motion. Men and women did not think it necessary to be forever "on the go;" there was no fear of lagging behind in the race of failing to keep up with the procession. Nowadays in a new sense he (or she) who hesitates is lost; the pace is so rapid there is no chance to regain lost ground.

A little boy said the other day to his mother, who scolded him for speaking crossly, "Mother, when it's you, you say it's nerves; when it's me, you say I'm cross." Women's nerves were not to the forefront as a topic of conversation in the old, golden days. They did not have to take long ocean voyages to repair the wear and tear of the social life upon the nervous system. They did not know what the rest cure meant, and the sanitarium was practically nonexistent.

On the other hand, the phenomenon of the athletic girl had not yet made her appearance—the girl of aggressively masculine appearance, who talks and walks like a man, who smokes and rides astride and slings slang and wears most of her brother's clothes and is stumped by nothing. This girl may be preferable to the wasp-waisted anemic habitue of the palmroom and the ballroom, who never knew the joys of a walk in the country or a hard game of tennis, but certainly there is some kind of happy medium between the horny-palmed, hard-faced Amazon with the strident voice and the mannish walk, and the languishing Lady Clara Vere de Vere type whose soul shudders at life's realities and shrinks from contact with God's world as He made it.

The old-fashioned woman was feminine. She did not wish that heaven had made her a man. She was the more attractive to men for that reason. The naissance-de-siecle woman sometimes wonders why the men do not flock around her as they did about her great-grandmother. The reason is that her grandmother was a womanly woman, and had no consuming ambition to be anything else. She did not care to appropriate the customs or the costumes of men. Their ways were not as her ways, nor their thoughts as her thoughts. She was content to be different.

She was so circumspect and right,
She had her soul to keep.

It is comforting to think that we have the old-fashioned woman with us still, that the majority of women today do not want the new order of things for which a few defeminized women are striving. Most women are still content to rule the world by the proverbial rocking of the cradle. Most women are satisfied to come short of a destiny if they may have a husband and a home and children. The best qualities of the women of the earlier day are inherited by their descendants in the present generation, and the descendants are proud and glad of the inheritance. The women who seek advertisement and exploitation in conspicuous ways sometimes seem to be in the majority merely because they are, like the Irishman, "not backward about coming forward," but their number is small as compared with the company of those who cling to ideals of conduct not yet outworn or obsolete, and esteem it not a reproach but an honorable distinction to be called "old-fashioned women."

REFLECTIONS OF A BACHELOR

From the New York Press.

Unstable as water thou shalt not stay on the wagon.

Unhappiness is a joy to a woman if she can only find an excuse for calling it romantic.

The reason every man wants to marry a pretty girl is everybody else thinks he ought to marry a sensible one.

Most people's idea of being high-class is having a horror of doing what ordinary folk do unless you call it by some superior name.

Can You Sew?

If you can you are not like most of the young women who are fast becoming the housewives of the present generation.

There was a time when all the women in the household worked at the spinning wheel and learned to use the needle.

But now-a-days it's different.

Today the young women have their hands full with the numerous parties, dances and receptions which fall to the lot of the maiden of this social age.

And strange to say the young women who require the most dresses are least able to sew them for themselves.

So you see there is a real demand for your services if you know only a little about sewing.

If you wish to test this, just write out a want ad and insert is in tomorrow's paper. You will soon have all the work you will have time to attend to.

It is one of the most profitable ways in which you can add to the family pocketbook. Try it.

ON ACCOUNT OF FORCE SALE

A GENTLEMAN'S HOME

On North Weber street, far enough out to be in the best of neighborhoods, and still comparatively close in. It has 11 rooms, fully modern. The whole house is beautifully finished, but the lower floor especially so. There is a reception hall opening off from large front porch into a large living room, with alcove and cosy corners; beautiful mantels and open grate; also opens into a front parlor, with sliding doors between. This room and the living room open into a charming dining room that can be shut off from the rest of the house, or the entire lower floor can be thrown together, being splendidly arranged for entertaining. The kitchen is splendidly and completely arranged: large and of the right shape. The basement is full cemented, partitioned for store rooms, and the best of furnaces. There are 7 bedrooms upstairs and large sleeping porches. The bath and halls are large and fully equipped; porcelain tubs and closets. The place is located on a corner, facing south and east. The price reads like there was something the matter with the property, but there isn't. It is first-class and worth much more than

ONE INCH A MINUTE FOR TUNNEL MACHINE

ATE ITS WAY INTO ROCK FOR FIFTEEN MINUTES.

Vendor Claims it Can Make 40 Feet a Day. Test Made in Georgetown, Colorado, District.

GEORGETOWN, Colo., April 10.—The Sigafoos boring machine, installed at the Georgetown tunnel, on Columbia mountain, was tried out several days ago for the first time with water. The cutters took hold, and after running for about 15 minutes it was found that ground had been broken at the average rate of one inch per minute, it is stated.

A great expense has been incurred by the Colorado Rotary Tunnel Machine & Development company in the installation of this huge machine, but the results so far attained have more than met expectations. The cost of facing the mountain was heavy, after which it became necessary to bring electric hammers into use in order to cut a hole for the headings or cutters of the machine. Ample water is now available to insure a steady run. It is claimed by the inventor that only 42 horsepower will be necessary, but in order to be safe, a contract has been made for 150 horsepower.

Mining men from various sections of the state have arrived to witness the demonstration. It is the general opinion that the rapid driving of tunnels has been solved, and if ground can be broken as claimed 40 feet a day it is said the machine will be installed in numerous mining regions of Colorado.

Work is to be resumed in a few days upon a large scale at the American Sisters, on Columbian mountain, and on the Prince of India tunnel, the portal of which is located near Lawson. It will be necessary to drive 1,000 feet before the American Sisters vein will be intersected, cutting under the deepest workings by 700 to 1,200 feet.

Work on the Centennial, Leavenworth mountain, continues, and regular shipments are maintained. The ore is taken in extending the adit tunnel the portal of which is at the head of [illegible] East. Drifting is in progress and a streak of two-ounce gold ore followed that is eight to 14 inches wide. As [illegible] as 800 feet of ground has been opened a number of leases will be granted.

BOULDER BOOSTERS REVIVE

Movement Started Last Fall to Put County's Resources Before Public Again Progressing.

BOULDER, Colo., April 10.—Renewed activity in the mining districts of the county has resulted in giving new life to the movement for organizing the mining interests for mutual benefit.

Last fall a large number of the mining men of the county signed a reorganization agreement, and plans were formulated for a general meeting, for the purpose of forming a permanent organization, but on account of the absence from the county of some of the leading mining men who were back of the movement, no definite action has been taken up to this time, but it has now been decided that the time is ripe to form the organization, and a meeting will be called at an early date for final action on the organization plans.

The purposes of the organization, as set forth in the reorganization agreement, are the promotion of every legitimate interest of the metal mining and milling interests of the county; the collection and recording of reliable data regarding the metalliferous mines and minerals of the county; the placing on exhibition of a representative display of the ores of the county; to furnish reliable information for the benefit of those who are interested in the development of the mining resources of the county; to unite the mining and business men of Boulder county in hearty co-operation for mutual benefit, and to make known to the world the great resources and advantages of Boulder county as a metal mining district.

SMELTER FOR ALMA AND FAIRPLAY CAMPS

PARK COUNTY REDUCTION COMPANY TO BUILD PLANT.

New Process That Has Been Tried in Utah Will Be Employed—Assured Support of Property.

LEADVILLE, Colo., April 10.—The Park County Reduction company which is arranging to build a new smelter at Alma, has practically completed arrangements for beginning work on the construction of buildings. It is expected that the first furnace will be on the way to completion about June 1, and that the treatment of ore can be started early in the fall. It is expected that the new plant will handle about 150 tons a day.

It is said that a new process of ore treatment will be adopted in the Alma plant. It is reported to be a combined roasting and smelting process in which both ores and fuel are introduced almost automatically. The fuel to be used is crude oil, although pulverized coal may be used with equally good results.

The process has been tried in a tentative way in Utah smelters and with sufficient success to encourage the Park County people in their plans to depend upon it from the start.

It is figured that in the course of a year or so the new company will be able to handle about 1,000 tons a day of ore. It is aimed to make contracts with most of the mines in the vicinity of Alma and Fairplay. Assurances have already been made which will practically guarantee the success of the enterprise for the first six or eight months. After that the plant is expected to be so firmly established that the second set of furnaces will have to be installed.

Along with the plans for the new plant the Park County people are also arranging to improve the facilities for transportation from the mines to the smelter. An outlay of $100,000 is being considered in this connection. The expenditures will be distributed over a period of three or four years, according to the announcement of those back of the move.

Mrs. Zelia Nuttall is now in Mexico as field director of the Reid-Crocker expedition, which is excavating the Pyramid of the Sun and Moon. The work is being carried on with funds furnished by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Mrs. Crocker of San Francisco.

SCHOOL LAND YIELDS WELL

Tonnage for March Was Largest in History—Drawing From Stored Ore.

CRIPPLE CREEK, April 10.—The March production from the mine on school section No. 10, adjacent to the town of Cameron, in this district, with an output of about 1,500 tons, established a new record for the property. Development was carried on last year and a heavy tonnage was broken and stored in filled stopes for future shipment. These stopes are now being drawn and in excess of 50 tons a day is loaded out from the mine by team for consignment to the valley mills. The ore is graded and will average up at $25 a ton.

The original lease on the state land is held by the Co-Operative Mining company, paying a royalty of 10 per cent flat to the state, but the mine is operated under a sub-lease by the School Section Leasing company and the royalty exacted by the original lessee is 25 per cent flat, an increase of 15 per cent, so that the Co-Operative company is making handsome profits from the operations of the sub-lessees.

Owing to a heavy flow of water encountered in the 800-foot level, work has been abandoned for the present in the lower workings, but there is ore sufficient in the upper workings to maintain the present rate of production for a long period. This mine, located on block 8, is the only producing property on the school land in the Cripple Creek district.

ANTI-MARRIAGE JUDGE.

From Woman's Tribune.

One of the funny happenings that are always occurring to brighten up the pathway of the man with a sense of humor is the recent marriage of a Portland judge who is known as the "anti-marriage judge," because he has persistently refused to perform the marriage ceremony for the reason that he did not want to have unhappy marriages on his conscience. Perhaps he had more confidence in his own power to choose wisely; at any rate he has made the venture. May he never in his own experience be able to confirm the statement recently made by a Stanford university professor that marriage is love's suicide.

MINING REVIVAL IN SILVER CITY

Georgetown White Metal District Is Awakening After a Slumber of Twenty Years.

EL PASO, Tex., April 10.—Alvin N. White, a lawyer of Silver City, N. M., is in El Paso for a few days.

Mr. White reports a great general mining revival this spring in the Silver City region. In the Pinos Altos district 150 miners are now at work developing their own individual holdings and getting out a big aggregate early ore shipment.

The Silver City smelter, which has been idle for a year past, is being thoroughly overhauled, and will resume active operations within the next 60 days.

The once famous Georgetown silver district, which has been idle for the last twenty years, has taken on a new and virile lease of life under the stimulus of new eastern capital investment, and is putting hundreds of tons of rich silver ore upon its mining dumps for early shipment.

The Chemung Copper company is blocking out a big body of copper ore, while the Burro Mountain Copper company is also doing active work.

Within the last 30 days 16 carloads of heavy mining machinery have been freighted from the railroad into the Burro mountain district, and these invoices of mining machinery are still of daily railroad arrival. Santa Fe railroad officials have just finished an inspection of the proposed branch line from Whitewater to Leopold in the Burro mountains, and the current local impression is that this 14 miles of new Santa Fe railroad will be built this summer.

Scarcely a day passes in Silver City without the arrival of many new miners who at once take leases on properties or engage in mining contract work.

In the mountain regions of Cuba there are many ridges and valleys of extremely fertile land, nearly all untouched, and existing practically as they did before the time of the Spaniards.

The total number of persons employed at mines and at the quarries of the United Kingdom during 1907 was 1,080,054. Of the [illegible] persons employed at mines 778,456 worked underground and 195,764 above ground. Of the latter 5,864 were females.

NEW ORE SHOOT ON THE GOLD SOVEREIGN

Values Run as High as Six and Eight Ounces Gold to the Ton by Assay Test.

Special to The Gazette.

ALTMAN, Colo., April 9.—A new ore shoot for the Gold Sovereign Mining and Tunnel company has been exposed at the north end of the company's estate by Miller and associates, holding a lease on the No. 3 shaft and adjacent workings. The shoot has been opened up on the main Gold Sovereign vein at a depth of 300 feet from surface. Values are running as high as six and eight ounces gold to the ton by assay test, and the ore going into the bins should ship at better than $80 a ton. The main workings on the Gold Sovereign still remain idle and no attempt has yet been made to replace the mine workings and equipment destroyed by fire last year.

CHAMP CLARK'S TROUBLES.

From the Washington Star.

The late General Hancock, who was scorned because he insisted that the tariff was a local issue, is coming into his own. Some people take off their hats now every time they pass his statue, and generally there is a disposition to recognise him as one of the wise men of the west.

Incidentally, Champ Clark and his commander-in-chief, Ollie James, are much worried over the split in the ranks of the House Democrats, which split, by the way, was to be expected as soon as the radical wing of the party, of which Mr. Clark and Mr. James are shining lights, got into the saddle in the lower branch of the national legislature. Mr. Clark, aside from the troubles of this factional row, is greatly handicapped in his leadership by his lack of knowledge of the niceties of parliamentary law. His biggest prop at the opening of the special session promised to be Representative Fitzgerald, of New York, but the latter insisted on doing a little leading himself, and, as has been recorded, led more than a score of Democrats away from the Clark standard. The Honorable Champ didn't improve his position materially, either, when he lost his temper on the opening day of the session and bawled at Mr. Fitzgerald across the chamber, "Aw, don't give me any of your slack jaw!"

Another Tease.

He forgot himself again last Wednesday, during his speech on the Payne tariff bill, when, after Representative Gaines of West Virginia had asked him a question and had sat down, Mr. Clark yelled to him impatiently—aye, most peevishly—"Here, you! Stand up there; I'm not through with you!"

Mr. Gaines, who comes from a district where the humblest of his constituents would knock a man's block off for less than half of that, was somewhat heated. He hopped to his feet.

"The gentleman from Missouri," quoth he, in those chillsome tones that mean quick business, "forgets the amenities of debate. There will be plenty of time for me to stand up after he has asked his question." And Mr. Clark subsided and did not say him nay.

FLATTERING SCALES.

From Success.

When Grover Cleveland's son Richard was born his good friend, Joseph Jefferson, drove over to Gray Gables to congratulate the father.

"Fifteen," was the reply.

"Nine," said the attending physician, who had just come in.

Mr. Cleveland assured the doctor that he must be mistaken. "The child weighs 15 pounds," said he. "I weighed him myself with the scales Joe and I use when we go fishing."

DISTANT FUTURES IN WHEAT TAKE UPTURN

July, September and December Deliveries Advance. Corn, Oats and Provisions Firm.

CHICAGO, April 10.—The May deal in wheat was sidetracked today to make way for the more distant futures, which advanced more than three cents a bushel, owing to liberal purchases by leading bulls. At the close, prices were 1-2 to 3 3-4 above the final quotations of the preceding session. Corn, oats and provisions also closed firm.

Purchases of a big line of July delivery by the same interest that is credited with control of the May option, was the feature of trade in the wheat pit. September and December were also bought freely by the leading longs and their followers. This demand inspired active covering by shorts late in the day, which carried the price of the deferred futures up to new high-record marks for the season.

The market followed its own course throughout the entire day without respect to news. Notwithstanding a firm market at Liverpool, due to decreased shipments from Argentina and Australia, the opening here was rather weak, with prices unchanged to 3 8@1-2 lower, compared with Thursday's close. The principal holder was a moderate seller of May at the start, and this was given as the reason for the heavy tone which prevailed during the opening hour.

Toward the end of the first hour, the July option began to show the effect of the support by prominent bulls, and during the remainder of the day the price of the future deliveries steadily advanced. Considerable excitement developed in the final half-hour and prices advanced more than one cent in the last few minutes of trade. The top for July was reached at $1.15. At the same time, May sold up to $1.26 and September to $1.07 7-8. This was a gain during the day for July of 3 1-2c, a low point of $1.11 1-2 being recorded early in the session. The market closed excited and strong, with July at $1.14 7-8@1.15. Final quotations on May were $1.25 3-8, 5-8 below the best mark of the day. September closed 3 3-4 higher at $1.07 3-4.

General selling of corn, inspired by ideal weather for farm work, caused weakness in the market for that grain early in the day, resulting in declines of more than 1-2. All of the loss, however, was regained and the close was firm, with prices unchanged to 1-8@1-4 higher, compared with the previous session. May sold between 65 5-8 and 66 1-2 and closed at the high point.

Oats closed firm, with prices unchanged to 1-2 higher. May being at

An Effective Evening Gown

Drawn by Anna B. Westermann

THE model here is for a young girl's Summer gown of French linen. It is cut in a simple fashion avoiding extremes.

The skirt is in four gores, not too tight about the hips, with a seam front and back, and on each side. There is an applied panel which may be effectively embroidered in the outline stitch in linen floss.

The waist carries on the panel effect also, with the embroidered design, and it is attached to the skirt in semi-princess style by the adjustment of the neatby.

DISHES THAT ARE PALATABLE

By Marion Harris Neil, M.C.A.

Pork Pie.

Put ten ounces of flour into a basin. Put two and a half ounces of lard and one gill of water into a saucepan, and bring it to the boil; stir it quickly among the flour and stir vigorously with a spoon; then take the hand and knead well for a few minutes.

Cut off a small piece to make a lid; make the remainder into a round lump, which must be raised into a shell with the hand, about six inches in diameter and three inches high.

Put the shell on a greased baking tin, roll out the lid, and cut the [illegible] of the top of the shell; also cut all scraps into leaves and ornaments.

Now cut up one pound of pork, fat and lean [illegible], into very small [illegible]; put them in a basin, with one teaspoonful of salt, a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper, and one tablespoonful of water. Mix all well with a spoon and fill the shell; wet the edges all around and stick on the lid, making a little hole in the middle.

Brush all over with beaten egg, stick [illegible] with leaves and ornaments, brush [illegible] with egg, and bake in a hot oven for one and a half hours. Serve hot.

Forced Rabbit.

Six large Spanish onions, half a pound [illegible], [illegible] rabbit, two ounces of ham, [illegible] ounce of grated cheese, one teaspoonful of salt, half a [illegible] of pepper, one grain of cayenne, two tablespoonfuls of cream. Peel the onions, place them in [illegible] boiling salted water, and boil for one hour quickly. With a fork then draw out the [illegible] of the [illegible].

Chop very finely the ham and rabbit; place them in a basin with the salt, pepper and grated cheese, [illegible] in the cayenne, add the cream, and mix well together.

With this mixture fill the centers of the onions, and place them on a baking tin. Pour round and over a [illegible] heaping tablespoonful of melted dripping or butter, and bake the onions in a hot oven for half an hour, basting them frequently with the dripping or butter. Serve on a very hot dish, garnished with parsley.

[illegible] Salad.

One pound of [illegible] or [illegible], three finely [illegible], two hard boiled eggs, one tablespoonful of [illegible], one [illegible] teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful of paprika, one grain of [illegible], half a head of celery, two lettuces.

[illegible] the meat from the [illegible] and cut it into small pieces. Wash the celery and slice it finely. Wash the lettuce well, place the outer leaves [illegible] a flat dish and place in the center the [illegible]. Cut the [illegible] in [illegible] neatly [illegible].

Place in a basin the cream, salt, pepper, paprika and half of the [illegible], and pour this over the [illegible] and [illegible]. Chop finely the whites of [illegible], and grate the yolks through a [illegible]. Chop finely the [illegible] of the [illegible].

Cut the remaining half of the [illegible] in [illegible], and arrange them [illegible] with the whites and [illegible] of egg. Keep in a cool place till [illegible].

[illegible]

[illegible] one pound of [illegible], one tablespoonful of [illegible], two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of lard, half a pint of [illegible], one [illegible], half a [illegible] of [illegible], half a tablespoonful [illegible], one [illegible] salt, and [illegible] of pepper.

[illegible] half an ounce of the butter in a frying pan; when the steam rises place in the kidneys, and cook them for ten minutes, turning frequently. Chop them fine.

Put the tablespoonful of flour into a saucepan, add the stock, salt, pepper, half a tablespoonful of mushroom catsup and the sauce.

Allow the mixture to boil, add the kidneys and cook all, stirring frequently for two minutes. Turn out on to a plate and allow to get cold.

[illegible] the yeast with the water which should be tepid. Sift the flour into a basin, pour in the yeast and water into the center, cover with a towel and put the basin in a warm place for two hours.

Whip the egg till very light, add it, and knead all well together till the dough leaves the sides of the basin dry.

Turn it out on to a board, roll it out the third of an inch in thickness. Cut into small rounds. Brush one half with a little egg. Place on each a heaping teaspoonful of the kidney mixture, cover with the remaining rounds, and press the edges well together.

Fry in smoking hot lard till a golden color. Place them in a tin in the oven for fifteen minutes. Serve on a hot dish, on which has been placed a folded napkin.

Sardine Rolls.

Eight sardines, one tablespoonful butter, one tablespoonful flour, one gill milk, one egg, three tablespoonfuls crushed vermicelli, one teaspoonful lemon juice, half a teaspoonful celery salt, quarter teaspoonful pepper, two slices of buttered toast.

Place a wire sieve over a basin and rub the sardines through with a wooden spoon. Melt the butter in a saucepan, stir in the flour, then gradually add the milk; stir the mixture till boiling.

Cook gently for three minutes, add the sardines, [illegible] and lemon juice and again mix well.

Take the mixture from the fire and allow the mixture to get quite cold. [illegible] a board, roll the mixture into [illegible] about the size of a cork. Whisk the egg till light, place the vermicelli on a sheet of paper. Dip the rolls first in the egg, then roll in the vermicelli. Fry in [illegible] hot fat till a golden color.

Cut the crusts from the toast and divide it into [illegible], [illegible] them on a hot dish, and [illegible] on [illegible] the sardine [illegible]. [illegible] of sardine makes a [illegible] without the toast.

What is "One Cup?"

Young housekeepers are often at a loss when a recipe calls for a cup of anything, to tell what kind of cup to use or how much a cup [illegible].

The [illegible] measure is a stone kitchen cup and means that cup filled to the brim. It is equal to one-half pint.

A cup of solid butter, milk, chopped meat or granulated sugar is equal to about half a pound. A cup of sifted flour is equal to quarter of a pound.

CAN BE USED FOR TWELVE DIFFERENT PURPOSES, AS EXPLAINED IN ARTICLE.

DEVOTION to domestic work does not necessarily mean that part of the day must be spent on the knees. We are getting away gradually from the uncomfortable and sometimes painful necessity of going down on all fours in order to rout the demon of dirt from our households.

Dustpans are made now with handles sufficiently long to make it possible to sweep up the litter without kneeling to do it. The dustpan lies flat on the floor and a long handled brush is used to sweep the dirt into the pan, which is then raised without the contents falling out by means of a catch that tilts the pan back. From the [illegible] that [illegible] be used without kneeling to the scrubbing brush that is [illegible] at [illegible] length was a natural transition.

The scrubbing brush that [illegible] the drudgery of household work by making it possible to scrub without kneeling is intended to be fastened to the end of a mop handle, that [illegible] is made to do duty in so many ways in the modern household.

In the handle of the scrubbing brush are nuts that are passed through the wire mop holder. When fixed firmly into place they hold the brush [illegible].

Not only does this new idea make it possible to scrub floors in the [illegible] attitude for such work, [illegible] moving the brush at arm's length, but it makes it easy to reach a wide space with the brush, to clean high [illegible] of the porch that could not be [illegible] in the ordinary way without a ladder, and simplifies the [illegible] with a long handle to the scrubbing brush, it is possible to [illegible] over a large area without moving.

The drudgery of scrubbing in the old way, by kneeling on the floor, scrubbing a patch and then moving painfully on knees that were never meant to [illegible] such attitudes, ought [illegible] to [illegible] a mere memory in all households, now that this idea of the handled scrubbing brush has been put to practical use.

A useful little article for the sink is a combination scraper and brush with stiff bristles. It is one of the [illegible] little articles that save a lot of trouble to the housewife. For cleaning bottles and jars a number of long [illegible] are being made with a little bunch of extra stiff bristles at the end for [illegible] out the corners and [illegible].

A most interesting little combination novelty is one for which no less than twelve uses are [illegible]. Among other things, it is a fruit and vegetable parer, slicer, apple corer, [illegible] and cabbage cutter. At one [illegible] is a knife for paring potatoes, which can be used in addition for [illegible] out the [illegible] of an apple, or for [illegible]. At the opposite end there is an [illegible] and simple little device that makes it possible to slice potatoes of any thickness by moving a blade up and down.

Under the slicing knife there is a slide that regulates the thickness of the slice cut. It can be used to cut cabbage for sauerkraut or cold slaw, by moving the slide close to the slicing knife so that the aperture is reduced to the small space necessary.

With this little combination kitchen tool the cabbage is sliced by drawing the blade towards you and potatoes are sliced with [illegible] quickness and [illegible] and of uniform thickness as rapidly as the knife can be drawn through the potato. The knife can be used also for slicing cucumbers, beets, onions or potatoes for frying in the German style, or for cutting green corn on the cob. Finally this combination tool can be used for scaling fish, the round edge of the paring knife being just the thing for this purpose.

A lamp cleaner that is ingenious in its way is made of wire with a flexible steel frame [illegible] at the cleaning end. By drawing this steel framework back it is adjusted to the width of the lamp chimney and in this position it can be used with a [illegible] cloth to rub off the interior of the chimney. [illegible] the first cleaning and is [illegible] it falls flat to the handle, so that it can easily be inserted in the lamp.

The Art of Frying

Frying is an art that too often is not understood. It is [illegible] by many the most unhealthful form of cooking but it would have lost [illegible] name if [illegible] always [illegible].

There are two kinds of frying; immersion in deep fat and what is known as half frying, or [illegible] a small amount of grease in a [illegible] and cooking more slowly.

Unless [illegible] is [illegible] half frying is almost sure to result in greasy foods that too often taste. The pan should be made very hot and the fat should be in small amount and steaming hot, before the article is added. The heat quickly [illegible] the pores and forms a brown [illegible]. When one side is done, the other is turned and browned.

Veal cutlet or chicken that is fried should always be fried in butter and [illegible] slowly, on the back of the stove. This [illegible] it to cook through without burning. If the [illegible] tender it should be parboiled before being put in the frying pan.

Any meat that is not [illegible] should be broiled rather than fried.

There is a method of cooking beefsteak that is [illegible] called frying, but which is really more like broiling. No fat is used in the skillet which is made very hot and the [illegible] frequently [illegible]. It is then put on a hot [illegible] and [illegible] with [illegible], salt and pepper.

[illegible] frying [illegible] a [illegible] kettle [illegible] at the [illegible] should half fill the kettle and be so hot that a crust of bread [illegible] browns almost instantly.

Do not think the fat [illegible] be smoking. [illegible] When it begins to [illegible] a little to one side of the stove [illegible] it at the boiling point. If the fat is too hot, the [illegible] the [illegible] or croquettes is not [illegible], and the fat [illegible].

To Clarify Fat

The old fashioned housewife will doubtless say, "Tell us how to clarify fat, every one knows that!" But many a young woman [illegible] of making her income go as far as possible has small idea that clarifying of [illegible] and fat remnants is a [illegible] saver. If she knows in a [illegible] way that economical [illegible] do such things, she has no idea how it is done.

A French cook has given these simple directions for clarifying. She, like many of her countrywomen, [illegible] beef fat or [illegible] to lard for frying, both because it is more digestible and [illegible] give the flavor that is often [illegible] unless pork fat is [illegible].

Instead of throwing away [illegible] from the meat, [illegible] of fat, [illegible]mings from the soup kettle and odd bits of suet, save them in a cool place and about twice a week put them all in a pan together with enough water to cover. Boil until the fat is all melted, when it should be strained with the water and set aside to cool.

When the fat has hardened into a cake lift it carefully from the water on which it rests, and scrape off all the dark particles from the bottom of the cake.

Melt this cake of fat over the stove and while it is still hot strain through a clean cloth into a stone jar or kettle. Keep in a cool place and the fat is ready to use for all frying purposes.

This process is called clarifying and should be insisted upon in all households where enough meat is used to make it worth while. An occasional pound of suet can be bought and added to the fat remnants.

The best kind of pans for small cakes are cone-shaped ones, with the bottom decidedly smaller than the rim. They are much less apt to stick than if the bottoms are rounding or as wide as at the top.

PUTTING THE WINTER CLOTHING AWAY

By Christine Terhune Herrick

A GENERATION or two ago stoves were taken down and woolens put up by about the fifteenth of May, no matter where the thermometer stood or what were the weather probabilities.

Nowadays both performances are regulated more by common sense than by custom and few and far between are the housekeepers who have a fixed date for either task.

I have no suggestions to offer concerning the time for dispensing with the heating apparatus, but there may be room for a word of counsel concerning woolens and furs and their care.

The course relative to them must be steered between the danger to health and comfort of putting them away too early to the risk to the furs themselves of being left out too long.

Not that leaving them out is likely to damage them. Moth are not fond of air and light and garments of any sort which are in constant use or which are taken out and shaken regularly are not the chosen prey of moth. It is the clothing which is in the closet untouched that the pests choose for their nesting place and diet.

For this reason the coats and other wraps are to be left out of the custody of camphor and moth balls should have a thorough beating and sunning at short intervals. Such beating and sunning are even more needed in the case of the garments which are to be packed away for the hot weather.

When you plan to put up your furs and woolens it is better to make a big job of it and do all you can at once. Make your preparations in advance by carrying piles of newspapers, saving empty coat and suit boxes and laying in a store of cotton cloth and camphor or moth balls or tar paper or whatever other preventive you prefer for the preservation of your clothing. Choose a bright day for the task and do it thoroughly.

Every piece must be sunned and beaten, as I have said. Put up a line in your yard or upon your porch, if possible, and if not open all the windows of the brightest room you have and let the garments air in the sunshine.

When it is feasible to hang them on the line provide yourself with one of the rattan beaters which come for rugs and whip your woolens well with this. The process dislodges the moth eggs and lurking larvae. Dust is their best lair and you cannot be sure you are rid of them as long as the garment gives out dust under a blow.

When the line is not to be attained hang your garments over a chair or from a couple of pegs and beat and brush them well. A good brush broom will do excellent service here.

The cleaning is really of as much importance as any amount of wrapping. I have heard old housekeepers say that if garments are well cleaned and then pinned up in paper or in cloths so that no insect can work his way in, all such strong smelling adjuncts as camphor, tar and tobacco are not needed.

This may be true and yet I have a preference—which may be superstition—for something in the way of a strong smelling compound to add to my woolens when they are put up for the Summer.

Not until a year or two ago did I learn the merits of powdered camphor. This is not the pure ground camphor powdered, as I at first supposed, but a preparation resembling it and smelling like it, to be strewn over and between the woolens before they are wrapped up.

I do not know that it is any better than other moth remedies, but it is not offensive in odor and is much cheaper than the pure gum camphor which was used in my childhood to put up with woolens and furs.

I know that it is often the custom to roll tightly the articles of heavy clothing which are not to be used again for some months and I always used to take it for granted that coats and waists and skirts must come out in such a state that they had to be pressed before they were fit to be worn.

Of late years I have learned wisdom. The boxes of which I have already spoken save a great deal of trouble to you if you will take the pains to line each box with newspaper, lay the garment on this, sprinkle on your camphor or whatever else you use, cover the contents of the box with another newspaper, tucking this in carefully all around and then putting the top on the box, tie it down securely.

If you have been heedful of every detail the garment will be as secure from moth as if it were rolled into a tight wad and then put into a cotton wrapping.

For gowns and long cloaks and overcoats such boxes may also be used. Each article should be folded carefully as for packing in a trunk. Avoid unnecessary creases and folds. I have seen a Winter coat come out of a box in which it had lain all Summer, in as good shape as it went in. For those who wish skirts and coats to hang at full length, come tar bags made to fit almost any size and it is also possible to fashion home made bags, which will serve the purpose quite as well.

Fold sheets, which may be coarse, but must be unbroken, in the size and shape of the bag you wish and put up the edges, taking pains to turn in the margins so that there may be no rift by which a moth could find ingress. Run a gathering string in the top.

Supply yourself with a skirt or coat hanger and put your garment on this. Hang the hook on a peg in your closet and slip the bag up over it until it reaches the hook. Draw the gathering string or tape tightly so as to leave not the smallest opening and leave the garment there. If this has been thoroughly beaten and brushed and if the bag is securely closed all around, your clothing will keep as well here as if wrapped in papers and put in a box.

As a matter of course, there are many articles which can be subjected to close packing without harm. Underflannels, woolen stockings and mittens and tippets, worsted shawls or vests and sweaters, or anything of this sort may be beaten, wrapped in a newspaper and then have an outer covering of cloth bound about them as snugly as you may desire. They will not suffer from strenuous treatment. This is injurious only to more delicate materials.

I have spoken chiefly of woolens, but furs may receive the same attention. Too much care cannot be bestowed upon the work of cleaning them, for the long pelt or curly hairs furnish retreats for moths, from which it is more difficult to eject them than from the folds of woolens.

I confess that with such furs as Persian lamb or long haired skins, I feel more comfortable when they are sent to a professional who will keep them in cold storage during the Summer, yet I believe they are as safe at home, if the work of putting up is properly done.

Those who are the fortunate possessors of cedar chests and camphor trunks, and other moth-proof boxes may feel they do not need the advice I am giving. Yet the part of it which relates to cleaning the woolens and furs adequately they would do well to lay to heart. I do not believe there [illegible] a moth-proof receptacle devised which would preserve its contents if the garments were put there with the eggs or larvae already in them. Even in such close quarters they will hatch and feed enough to do serious injury.

However the garments are put up—whether in trunks, boxes or bundles—let me beg of you to mark each parcel or box. You have no idea how much trouble it will save you in the Fall.

No one who has known the annoyance of a hurried search through half a dozen parcels of similar shapes and sizes for John's heavy flannels or Johnny's Winter cap or Mary's woolen stockings, can fail to recognize the advantages of a marking system which will enable her to see at once what are the contents of the parcels without the bother of undoing them.

A pencil will do it and the marking should be clear: "John's best thick coat," "Will's second best heavy suit," "Mary flannel petticoats"—it takes a little time to write these compared with the time and bother the inscriptions will save you later on.

One word of counsel which may perhaps be unnecessary. Put all your clothes away in good order!

I know it is not always easy to find time to patch flannels and darn woolen stockings when your hands are full with getting the children's thin clothing ready for the first hot days and it does seem too much to stop and put a new skirt braid on the heavy petticoat which you do not expect to see again for three or four months.

But there is a comfort unspeakable when cold weather comes to know that the Winter wear is ready, whole and clean, fit to put into immediate service without a preliminary penance of mending and patching.

Work and Play for the Idle Hour

COLLAR, CUFF and EMBROIDERY BOWS

Drawn by Sarah Hale Hunter

WHEN using this printed design from the paper the directions are as follows:—

If the material used is very sheer, the easiest way is to lay it over the design, which will show through plainly, and draw over each line with a hard, sharp lead pencil. If your linen is heavy buy a piece of impression paper, the kind that does not rub off, lay it on your material, place the design over it and trace with a hard pencil. You will find the design neatly transferred and ready to be embroidered.

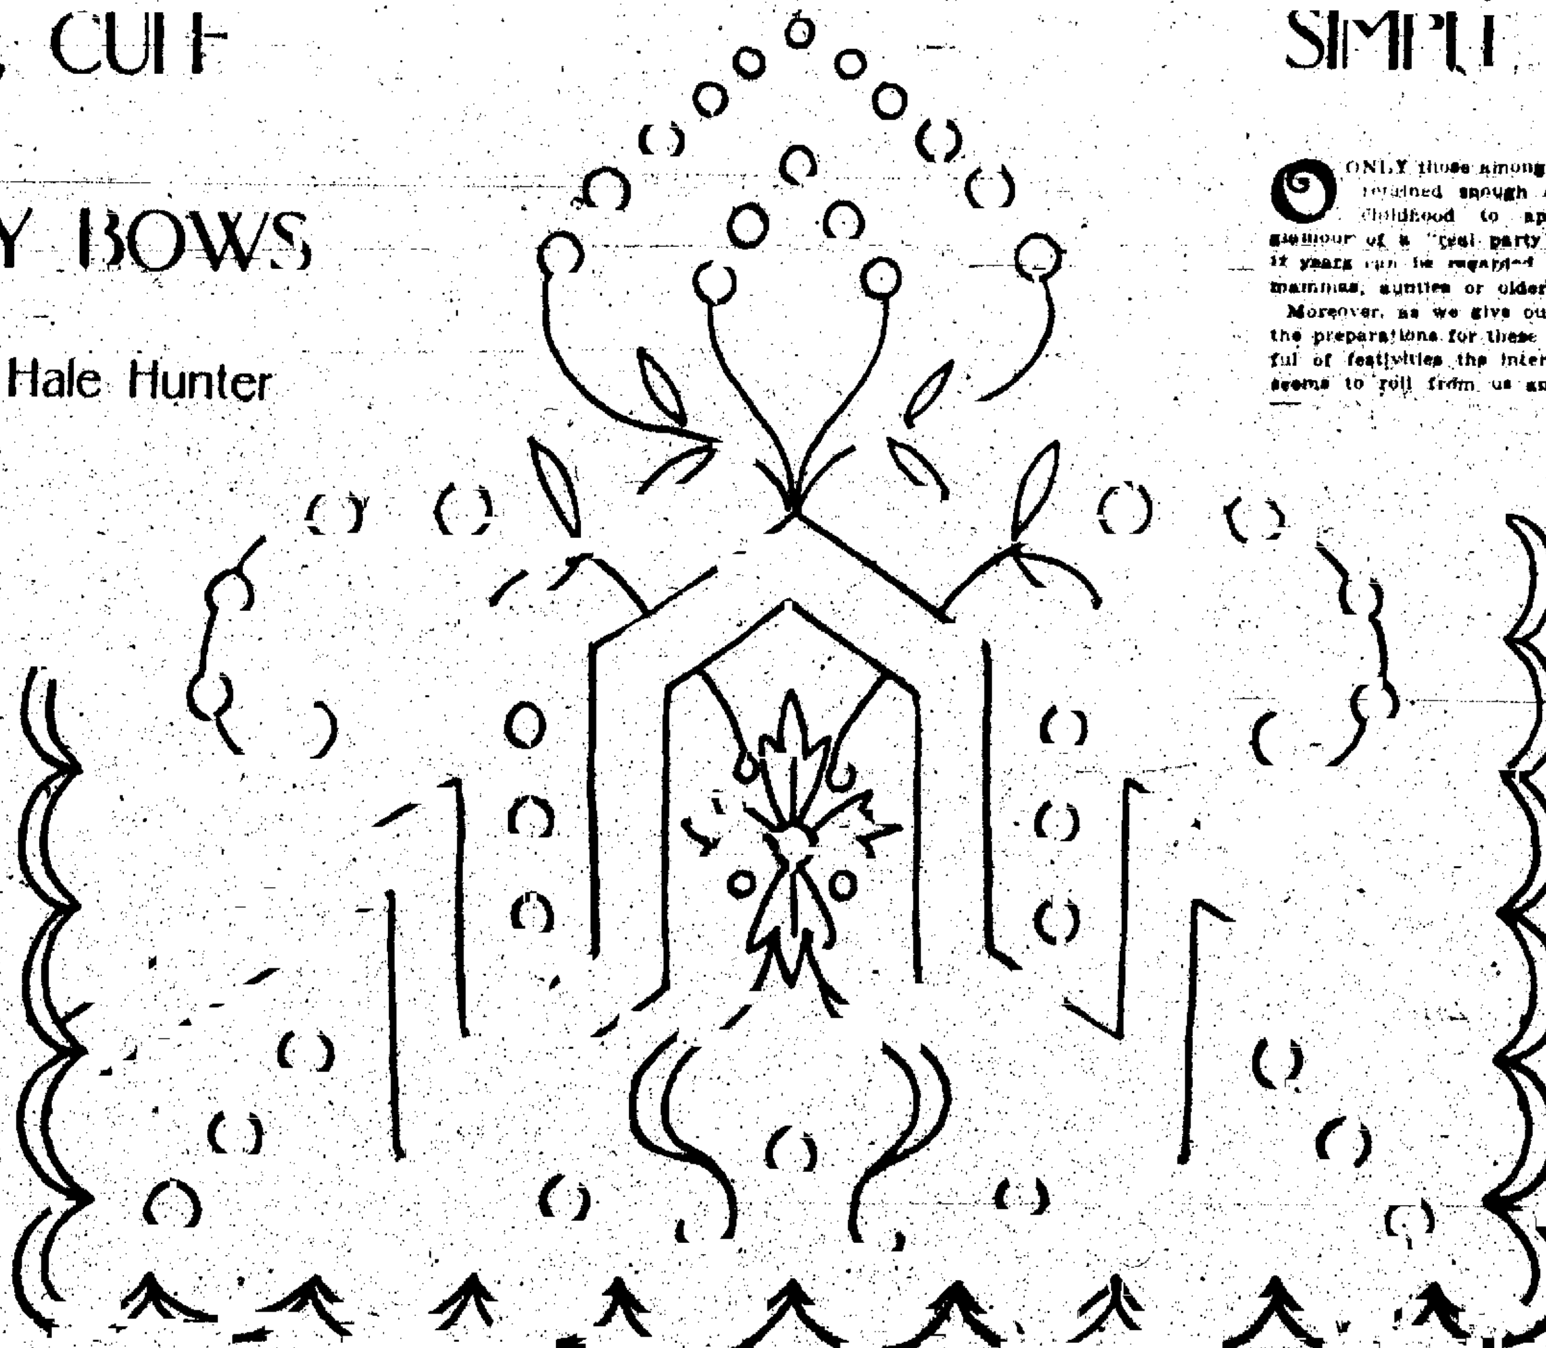

In transferring a design when only one part is given fold your linen so that the two right sides come together. Between these two sides insert two sheets of impression paper, placing the wrong sides of paper toward each other, then place your design on the folded material and draw each line firmly with a hard, sharp pencil. You will find that both sides of the design are produced on the linen.

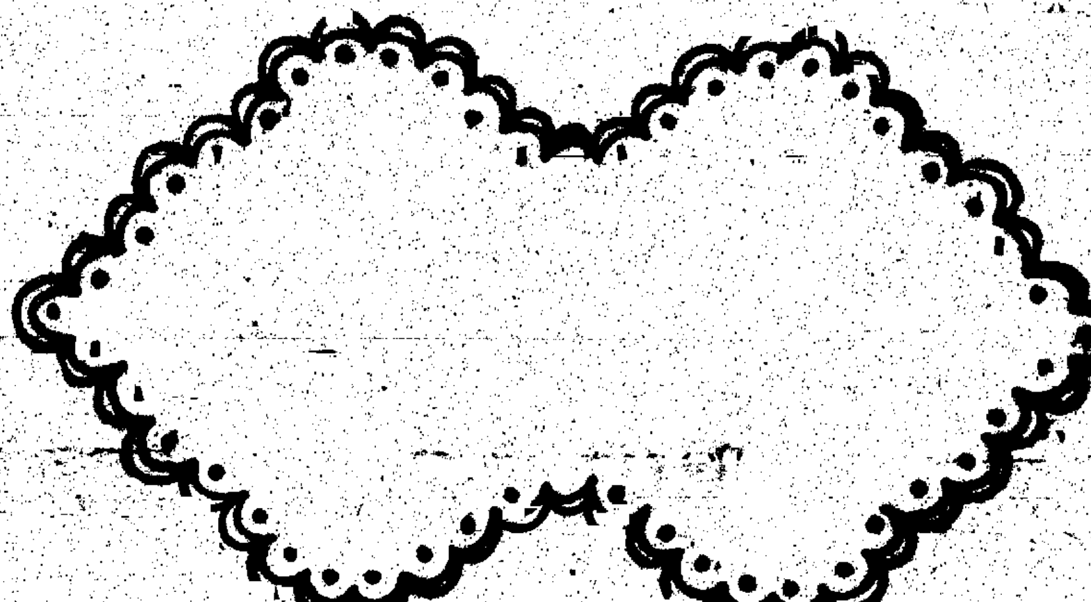

The collar and cuff design match the shirtwaist of last week. The scallops should be padded and then closely button-holed.

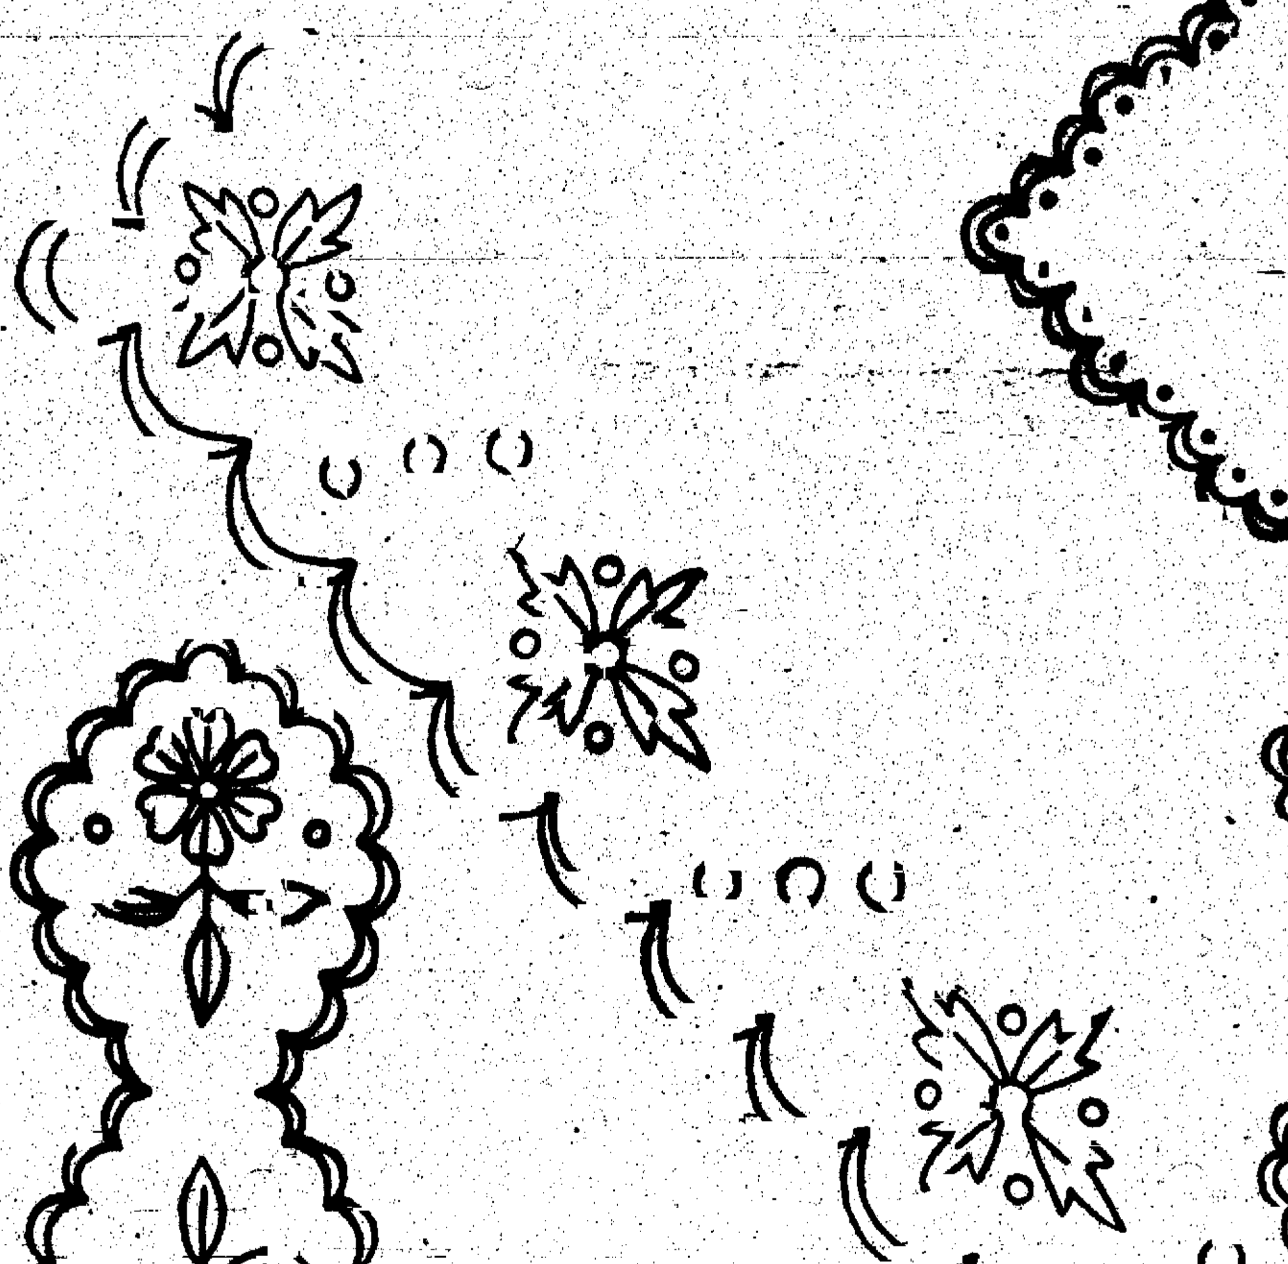

The figures, leaves and scrolls should be worked in the solid embroidery, with the stems in the outline stitch and the dots as eyelets, or solid if preferred.

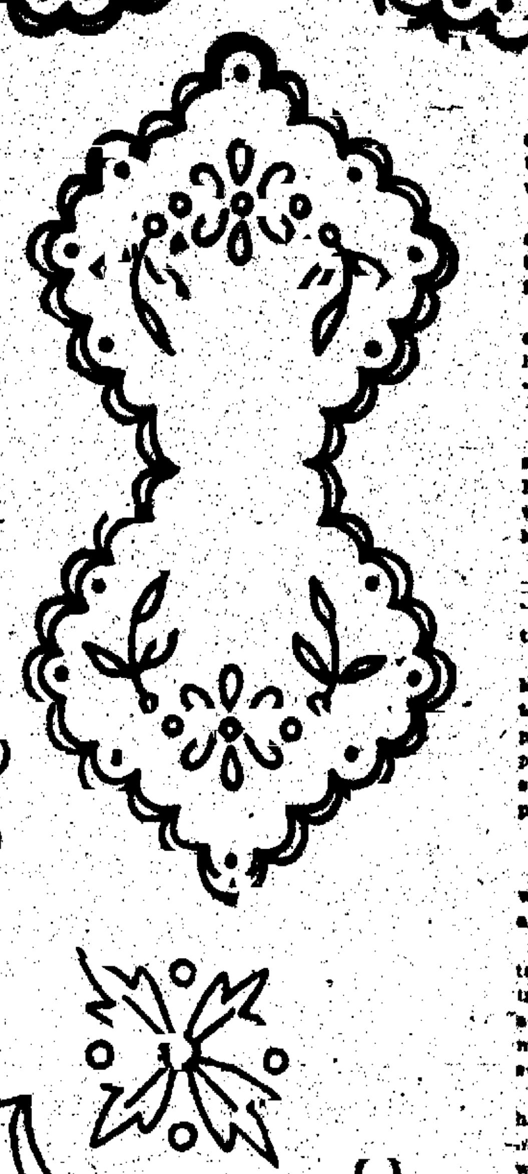

The little bows would look best if worked in the solid satin stitch with the [illegible] in the outline stitch, and the scalloped edge closely buttonholed.

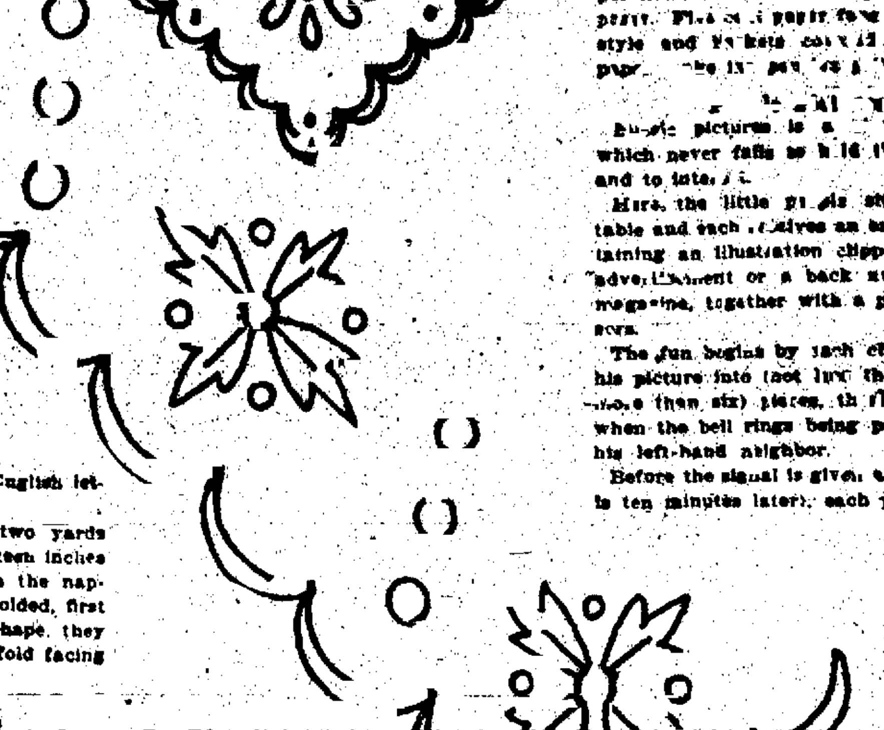

SARAH HALE HUNTER.

Miss Hunter's Correspondence

MADELINE:—A [illegible] pillow for the library or [illegible] be made of tan or [illegible] leather. The [illegible] be [illegible] upon the leather, [illegible], but carefully cut out with a pair of [illegible] scissors, or a [illegible] penknife, [illegible] the [illegible] with curved [illegible].

[illegible] for the [illegible] of the pillow, or a [illegible] one of [illegible]. A [illegible] of silk, [illegible] cloth or [illegible] in [illegible] the front part. This is [illegible] to the cut work and [illegible] to the edge of the leather, and stitched with two rows on the [illegible] the same [illegible].

The [illegible] of the leather [illegible] not be [illegible] only the [illegible] material is used.

[illegible]

Agnes B.—[illegible] stitch is [illegible] used when a [illegible] is to be [illegible] rapidly.

It is [illegible] by working [illegible] two to six rows of [illegible] stitches, rather large, one row below the other, and to the left of the line above. A twisted silk will be the [illegible] satisfactory to use, as the smooth silk becomes rough very quickly. A twisted silk also shows the character of the stitch so well.

This stitch can be used whenever it seems suitable, and is very effective.

Shirtwaist Design

M. E. T.:—I have drawn the waist pattern and hope you will be pleased with it. Colored embroidery on white shirtwaists is much used this season, and is a welcome change from the all white work. Delft blues and sage greens are favorite colors. You can use either colored embroidery, silk or colored mercerised cotton.

Cape Collar for Child's Coat.

Mrs T. B. [illegible]:—A very attractive cape collar for a child's coat of white or blue broadcloth has the design both braided and embroidered with white silk soutache braid and [illegible].

A design of leaves with three petals connected with a Wallachian eyelet in the center and scroll lines extending from one leaf to another can be used.

The embroidery in the center of each leaf is done with Roman floss, and the embroidered dots which are used at intervals are worked solid, in satin stitch, with the floss. A thin silk lining should be used to cover the wrong side of the embroidery.

This may be basted to the edge of the cape and a well-padded buttonholed edge worked through both materials, using Persian floss for this.

Luncheon Set

Alice H.:—A luncheon set both practical and attractive is of heavy linen, or plain satin damask with a deep hemstitch hem with mitred corners, and the initials on each piece in old English letters.

The lunch cloth [illegible] be two yards square, and the napkins eighteen inches square. Place the initials on the napkins, so that when they are folded, first square and then in triangle shape, they will be in the center of the fold facing the corner.

No Other Patterns

Mrs. J. W.:—No patterns are sent out except those that are published in the paper. One for a Princess [illegible] would be too large for the space in the paper, and has never been given.

Scallops.

Mrs. R. C. P.:—Thank you for your kind appreciation of the patterns. Different scallops will be given soon.

Clover Leaves

Irma K.: The [illegible] of a clover design are first lightly padded and then worked entirely over with the correct shade of clover green. After this the pink is used, the lightest shade at the top, and darker towards the [illegible], making the stitches about one eighth of an inch long, and using several strands of silk in the needle, taking the stitches half in the linen and half in the [illegible].

In shading clover leaves, make the "high light" in the center of the leaf.

Child's Short Coat.

Mrs. W. P. C.:—I am very glad that you have found the patterns useful, and will draw one for a child's short coat as soon as I can.

SIMPLE PARTIES FOR LITTLE PEOPLE

By Mary Dawson

ONLY those among us who have retained enough of their own childhood to appreciate the glamour of a "real party" at 7, 10 or 12 years can be regarded as successful mammas, aunties or older sisters.

Moreover, as we give ourselves up to the preparations for these most delightful of festivities the intervening years seems to roll from us and our pleasure in the frolic is hardly [illegible] than that of the youngsters themselves.

Luckily in the case of children the pleasure of a party is often in inverse ratio to the amount expended upon it. Trifling favors and novelties [illegible] whipped up in half an hour from odds and ends of silk or colored paper give as much pleasure as shop-bought treasures, while goodies prepared in the home kitchen, with the addition of [illegible] holiday [illegible] become under the [illegible] of the [illegible] a truly [illegible] feast.

[illegible] and tissue paper [illegible] are every year [illegible] and [illegible] varied in design and cheaper in price, has proved a veritable [illegible] for frolics [illegible] which little can be spent.

[illegible] of the [illegible] enjoyable [illegible] for birthdays and other festive [illegible] are now all paper affairs [illegible] but an hour or two [illegible].

The [illegible] mother [illegible] is in doubt as to just what turn the [illegible] will take may like a [illegible] of the [illegible].

A Paper Party.

As [illegible] he or she [illegible] a [illegible] to be worn during the evening. The [illegible] are [illegible], the [illegible] Dutch [illegible] and [illegible] all are of [illegible].

With all the [illegible] in [illegible] the affair [illegible] with [illegible] the trouble or the [illegible].

The paper napkins can be retained for the search game. Use [illegible] the conventional white ones, which are [illegible] of a protection for party [illegible] with surprise rolls fastened in with [illegible] strips of tissue [illegible] bon.

Here, the little people sit around a table and each receives an envelope containing an illustration clipped from an advertisement or a back number of a magazine, together with a pair of scissors.

Before the signal is given again (which is ten minutes later), each player must have put together the illustration received.

If this is done correctly within the given time the child who [illegible] will be eligible to draw for the [illegible]. Give a [illegible] as the [illegible] prize [illegible] for the little [illegible].

The [illegible]

A very jolly game which any child will grasp readily if he or she is not already familiar with it, is "[illegible]."

[illegible] the child [illegible] in a [illegible] and each [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] part of the [illegible] of [illegible]. This [illegible] the [illegible] another the [illegible] the [illegible] another the [illegible] and so forth. [illegible] (or [illegible] aloud) a little story, [illegible] all the [illegible] parts are [illegible] one by one. New 1850 Bonnets for Children

Look at the little m... in the first illustration. Could anything ... ore ... ing and more youthful be imagined than ... bonnet of supple pliable novelty straw, with its trimming of apple-blossoms and black velvet ribbon?

The shape is really nothing but a plateau of deep ecru fancy straw, woven in basket effect. It consists of a straight, low, narrow crown, and a very wide brim, which is rolled up high, the centre front describing a semicircle, and which droops softly at the sides, in true poke style. The width of the back portion of the brim is reduced by bending it up flatly so as to touch the crown, and holding it in this position by tacking black velvet ribbon to it. This ribbon is drawn over the sides of the brim, and snugly tied under the chin, securing the hat firmly on the wearer's head.

The garniture a sparse, leafless garland of apple blossoms, interspersed with a few spray forget-me-nots —is so arranged that it encircles the exposed back portion of the crown, and from there extends over the reversed brim section, decorating the front and sides.

No less charming is the model shown in the following illustration. It also shows bonnet outlines, yet is a hat. For its development rough straw in a deep, warm tone of Ver... The trimming consists of a large bow of wide satin ribbon in light tones of beige, formed by many wired loops and so arranged over the front of the crown as to spread in all directions. This ribbon arrangement affords a splendid setting for a little branch of small apples in wonderfully expressive, vivid tones of scarlet and ruby, with brown, woody stems, and rich, glossy foliage in somber tones of green.

A charming afternoon hat for the little tot is reproduced in the fourth illustration. This is a medium large, blocked shape of antique blue Milan, lustrous and exceedingly fine in texture. It has a dome-shaped little crown, and a rigid brim of even (moderate) width all around, which droops noticeably on all four sides.

The trimming is formed merely by two narrow forget-me-not garlands in pale blue and light pink tones, with a few tiny, light green leaves interspersed. These encircle the crown at the base and near the top, and terminate at the back under a large, soft bow of deep moss green velvet ribbon, extending over the back in long loops and ends.

The crown is like that of the famous mob cap, very large, full and puffy, and is formed by a number of closely lapped lace frills, overlaid by a round, scolloped section of the embroidery, and trimmed with incrustations of embroidered medallion-motives. As to the brim, it droops softly from the crown, and is formed by two pleated frills of the Valenciennes laces, with Rococo bows of white satin ribbon and clusters of little pink pompadour roses cleverly inserted between its folds.

A triple-leafless garland of the same flowers affords the garniture, and hides the dividing line between crown and brim. It is arranged about the base of the crown, encircling it gracefully, and also serving for confining the dainty masses of the lace and embroidery, and is succeeded by a wide band of the white satin ribbon arranged into thousands of tiny puffs by means of shirrings.
